Council says won't grant exemptions

The Virginia Beach City Council recently decided not to allow any exemptions to its proposed water impact fee -- at least not yet.

The council is considering an impact fee for the Lake Gaston water pipeline. The fee would be levied on new homes and businesses based on the number of drains in the building.

The council decided it was too early to grant exemptions to the proposed water impact fee.

Action on the impact fee has been put off until the council's Jan. 6 meeting. At its last regular meeting, council said that any fee, if created, would be applied retroactively to building permits issued after Dec. 16.

The fee would pay for 51 percent of the pipeline's cost. The remainder would come from an increase in water rates.

$34 million office project planned

A $34 million, six-building office complex has been proposed for Oceana West Industrial Park, next to Lynnhaven Mall. It is possibly the largest office complex in the city.

The project, "Lynnhaven Corporate Plaza," will consist of four, three to ten-story office buildings. Plus, a combination athletic-social club and a parking garage.

The buildings will center around two large, landscaped plazas and a four-story atrium. The complex will be just off Lynnhaven Parkway, just north of Lynnhaven Mall.

On the recommendation of the Virginia Beach development authority, city council recently supported three $10 million state industrial development bonds for the project.

The project will cost about $34.5 million. All but $4.5 million will be financed by the bonds.

The proposed office project will be 430,000 square feet. Office space will account for 340,000 square feet, according to building plans.

Three lawyers, John Summers of Virginia Beach, and Martin Gauderson and John Deal, of Norfolk, are behind the development.

Legislators to hold public hearing

Members of the General Assembly Delegation will hold a public meeting on Thursday, Jan. 2 at 7:30 p.m. The purpose of the meeting is to give Virginia Beach residents an opportunity to express concerns about the 1986 legislative package before the upcoming General Assembly Session.

It will be held in the Virginia Beach City Council Chambers, City Hall Building, Municipal Center.

Innovation key to department

By Cheryl Martin
This is the first of a three-part series on the Virginia Beach Police Department's innovative crime fighting techniques.

Innovation is the Virginia Beach Police Department's key to success, according to the Chief of Police, Charles R. Wall. He views the department's progressiveness as a major factor in the city's low crime rate.

For example, the department has been computerized for at least nine years while many other major cities are just starting to use computers. Officers in squad cars are able to tie into local, state and federal information banks on the spot.

Until a year and a half ago, the city had more computers in use than any police department in the country. Phoenix is now the leader, according to the chief, who is in his 27th year of law enforcement.

Law enforcement officials from all over the world have come to view the computer system in Virginia Beach.

Computerization is not the only feature in the department to draw attention of law enforcement officials from as far away as Spain and Australia.

Crime Prevention
The department is very involved in crime prevention. Its ESCAPE program has received much recognition.

This crime prevention program is part of the curriculum in all fourth grade classes in the city. The program's goals, which teaches personal and property safety, is to teach the children a safer way to grow up.

"If we can teach these children good crime prevention habits before they are set in their ways our goal is met," Wall, who has two sons of his own, said. "A recent study shows that nine- and 10-year-olds are still very impressionable and are willing to accept new ideas. As children get older it is more difficult to change their habits and attitudes."

Block Security
Another very successful crime prevention program in Virginia Beach is Block Security.

There are currently 60 neighborhoods involved in the Block Security program. That is more than double the number of two years ago.

"When the number of burglaries is up seven or eight percent for the first 10 months of this year, I think it is significant that no burglaries have occurred in Block Security neighborhoods," Wall said. "This really shows the success of the program."

Virginia Beach Chief of Police, Charles R. Wall is in his 27th year of law enforcement.

The department has stringent requirements for becoming a Block Security neighborhood. The participants must earn their "watch sign." The program is designed basically for single family residential neighborhoods.

High school papers take top ratings

Bayside High School's newspaper, Shore Lines, won a Trophy Class rating and Kempsville High School's newspaper, Treaty, won a first place rating in the 1985 Virginia High School League's (VHSL) publication contest.

In addition, Shore Lines received a Medalist certificate from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association in November, a ranking which the association generally bestows on only ten percent of student publications which earn a first place rating. The association cited Shore Lines for exceptional merit in writing/editing and design/display.

The school newspaper entries were from the 1984-85 school year. English teacher Linda Cobb sponsors Shore Lines; English teacher Sarah Seeley sponsors the Treaty.

Trophy class represents the highest VHSL rating; it is awarded for "outstanding achievement in quality publications service to the school and community." Shore Lines received 944 points out of a possible 1,000, for the trophy rating.

The VHSL student newspaper evaluator said of Shore Lines, "...a very attractive job. I was especially impressed with the meticulous design. This says a lot about the pride you have in your publication."

The Treaty barely missed the trophy class, garnering 870 points for a first place rating. A student newspaper must receive at least 875 points for a trophy class rating.

They also have a special credit card to use when educating owners about credit card fraud.

Store Design
The chief would like to see the department become more involved in CPTEP (Crime Prevention Through Engineering Design) projects. Working with businesses on store design will lead harder to hit targets, according to Wall. Factors to consider include the types of windows put in, also their placement, type of shrubbery to use as well as lighting.

The department was involved in this type of project with Virginia Beach General Hospital. They provided input on the design of the Hospital's new wing. A big area was lighted because staff members must go to park areas at odd hours.

Trauma Team
The department has also established a special trauma team for dealing with family problems and child abuse. Team members are police officers and social service personnel.

"When a call comes in, they (police and social services) respond together," Wall said. "This way the police can handle any law enforcement needed and social services is there for counseling the people involved. The teams are really super," he beamed.

Crime Solvers
Crime Solvers is another outstanding program in Virginia Beach. The program has a 98 percent conviction rate. Over the last three or four years only six people have been acquitted; according to Wall.

"In reviewing over the last two years, our program in comparison with other cities of one-fourth to one-half million people has been chosen the most productive," Wall said.

Police Chief honored

Virginia Beach Chief of Police, Charles R. Wall recently received the Dictograph Public Safety Leadership Award.

The award is given in recognition of his innovation in police techniques, relationship with fellow officers, and profile within the community, according to Dictograph, a security systems company.

Wall has served as Virginia Beach Police Chief since 1981.

Seton House Director, Susan Jones, says the shelter opens its doors to girls who need help.

"Ma" Atkins wins by getting "Ugliest" for charity

"Her Royal Ugliness," Ma Atkins loves her work and her boss Okie Oeamb.

By Cheryl Martin

"Ma" Atkins is a special lady. Her customers at Smokie's Bar in Virginia Beach are the first to sing her praises.

She has been crowned "Her Royal Ugliness" at the Ugliest Bartender's Ball. This was in recognition of her raising over $4,000 in the Fifth Annual Multiple Sclerosis Ugliest Bartender Contest.

Ma Atkins endured pies in the face and eggs in her hair to raise the money. Her fundraising methods are unique. For a 25 cent donation the contributor can hit her in the face with a pie. The stakes are higher for beer and egg "shampoops."

"Oh they (the customers) have done a lot to me during this contest," she said. "The worst had to be the shampoo. They put light and dark beer in my hair, along with eggs and tomatoes."

It may be hard to believe she would endure such torture in the name of charity, but it is true. For the doubting types Atkins has pictures of the event.

The funny part is, she said, soon after the shampooing her hairdresser asked what she had been doing to her hair to make it so soft.

"Ma and her Ugly Campaign Team are to be congratulated for all their ugly efforts," Elynn B. Fresco, Ugly Bartender Coordinator, said. "Especially

Typical Beach runaway doesn't go far from home

By Cheryl Martin

The typical runaway in Virginia Beach is a white female between 14 and 16 years old, according to Susan Jones, director of Seton House, a home for runaway girls. The runaways usually don't go far from home and they rarely leave the city.

Why do children run away? Jones says there are probably as many reasons as there are runaways.

"Some are just spoiled and mad because they can't get their way," Jones said. "Others may be running from something like sexual, psychological or emotional abuse. Others still may just be confused. They feel ugly and unwanted, like I'm going out to eat worms and die."

In most cases, the girls eventually find that they are really loved and wanted.

Seton House, a private non-profit organization, has been helping runaway girls in Virginia Beach for one year. The temporary shelter for girls, ages 13 through 17, opened its doors Jan. 1, 1985.

Seton House on N. Lynnhaven Road, is not a flophouse for runaways, Jones stressed. The first rule for girls who want to come to the shelter is they must contact their parents.

It is a place to come and be safe during a crisis. The ultimate goal is to reunite the girls with their families.

According to Jones, of the 85 girls the program has helped this year, only two have not been reunited with their families.

Seton House feels it is not in the girl's best interest to return home, the case is turned over to Social Services.

There are three full-time staff members at Seton House. All are degreed counselors. There are also three part-time staff members, who work the night shift.

Taking a stand

It is time for Virginia Beach, as a city, to make a resolution to help end discrimination and human suffering.

All across Virginia, city governments and university boards are demanding that South Africa grant equal rights to blacks. The way these groups can influence the South African Government is by total divestiture of holdings in companies that do business with South Africa.

One of the strongest anti-apartheid measures in the state and a good model to follow, was enacted recently by the City of Richmond.

Richmond City Council voted to sell all holdings in companies with South African operations. The city will have to sell between $40 million and $50 million in holdings, according to Mayor Roy A. West.

Richmond's ordinance also bars the city administration from awarding contracts to companies with South African ties, except under emergency circumstances.

Most Virginia universities and localities with policies on South African-related investments have decided to sell holdings in companies that do not abide by the Sullivan Principles. These are guidelines developed in the late 1970s by Leon Sullivan, a General Motors board member and Philadelphia clergyman. They forbid discrimination against South African black workers and require a commitment by companies to improve the conditions of those employees.

These guidelines do make a difference. But it will take a line stance like that taken in Richmond to bring about real change.

Virginia Beach must stand firm against apartheid. It can do so by enacting a policy similar to that of its neighbor to the north.

Virginia Beach residents who want to see an end to the social injustice of apartheid should also urge the General Assembly to vote on statewide action.

The divestiture issue is likely to come up during the General Assembly session convening Jan. 8.

Del. William P. Robinson, Jr. (D-Norfolk) has said he will introduce a pair of resolutions. One will condemn apartheid and the other will request the state pension system divest itself of South African-related holdings as soon as possible.

Virginia Beach residents should press their local and state representatives to take action against apartheid. —C.M.

A job well done

Congratulations to teachers, administrators, librarians and students in the Virginia Beach City Public Schools for their active participation in Virginia Reading Month.

Facing an already hectic December, schedule because of the holidays, these people still found the time and the energy to promote reading.

Several groups collected used books to give to others. These books will go to people as close to home as the Tidewater Detention Home and as far away as Columbia, South America. Their efforts truly promote and surpass the theme of the program, "Becoming a Commonwealth of Readers."

Programs featuring storytelling through songs and a festival honoring Dickens were also held. Also, community programs for parents to help them, help their children with reading.

The fruit of their labor should last the year through for they have worked extremely hard to bring the joys of reading to all residents of Virginia Beach. —C.M.

Radiation Oncology Department completed

Virginia Beach General Hospital recently celebrated the completion of the Radiation Oncology Department. On hand for the event were, from left: Dr. Anas El-Mahdi, chairman of radiation oncology; Rita B. Wood, VBGH president; Sally Grieb, administrative director of radiation oncology; and State Senator Joe Canada. The hospital estimates between 7,000 and 8,000 treatments will be administered during the first year of operation.

Aiding Choke Victim

By C. Everett Koop
(Second of a two-part series)

The "Heimlich Maneuver" for rescuing choking victims was devised in the early 1970's by Henry J. Heimlich, M.D., Professor of Advanced Clinical Sciences at Xavier University.

Commentary

Heimlich's maneuver depends for its success on the fact that a choking victim has a large volume of air in his lungs, even if he was exhaling when the choking began. If a rescuer presses sharply repeatedly on the victim's abdomen at a point between the rib-cage and the navel, that reservoir of air is expelled up the airway with a great deal of force, thus dislodging the obstruction from the victim's throat.

As noted in last month's column, the Heimlich Maneuver can be performed on standing or seated victims and on persons who have fallen to the floor.

It can be performed on children and even on one's self. When the victim is standing, the rescuer stands behind him and wraps his arms around his waist. He then makes a fist with one hand and places the thumb side of the fist just above the victim's navel and below the tip of the breastbone. He grasps the fist with his other hand and presses it into the victim's abdomen with a quick upward thrust. Several thrusts may be necessary to clear the airway.

The technique for the seated victim differs only in that the rescuer kneels behind the chair and wraps his arms around both chair and victim (unless the chair back is too large, in which case he turns the victim and performs the Heimlich Maneuver from the side). The victim who has collapsed to the floor is rolled onto his back, face up. The rescuer straddles the victim and places his hands, one on top of the other, on the victim's abdomen, with the heel of the bottom hand slightly above the navel. He then presses into the abdomen with a quick upward thrust, repeating thrusts as necessary.

A choking infant is either held in the rescuer's lap or placed on a firm surface, such as a table. Instead of fists and hand, the rescuer uses two or three fingers for the quick upward thrust into the baby's abdomen. Repeat as necessary, taking care not to injure the child with too much force.

Many people have saved themselves from choking by positioning their own hands slightly above their navels and thrusting upward quickly and repeatedly.

Alternatively, the victim can position his abdomen against the edge of a chair back, a table or similar solid object and press himself quickly and forcefully against it. As with the other forms of the Heimlich, several thrusts may be necessary.

Whenever the Heimlich Maneuver has been performed, the victim should be seen by a physician as soon as possible, even if no complications are apparent. Injury from the Heimlich is rare, but it can occur if the Heimlich was not performed properly.

The best way to deal with obstruction of the airway, of course, is to prevent it. The American Red Cross, whose experience with this problem is great, offers the following advice: cut food into small pieces and chew slowly and thoroughly, especially if you wear dentures; don't laugh and talk while chewing and swallowing, and avoid excessive intake of alcohol before and during meals; finally, keep children from walking, running or playing while they have food in their mouths, and keep small objects, such as marbles, beads and thumbtacks, out of the reach of infants and small children.

Wants tobacco free society

Most Virginia Beach residents are aware that the U.S. Surgeon General issues an annual report on the health consequences of smoking, and that these reports summarize evidence implicating smoking as an important cause of cancer, obstructive lung disease and heart disease.

We are also aware however, of the tremendous importance of the tobacco industry in our state as an employer, a taxpayer, and a benefactor to many worthwhile causes. It can be difficult to weigh all these arguments fairly and form a solid opinion about tobacco's place in our society.

Last month however, something happened which should help us decide. The Medical Society of Virginia held its annual meeting and adopted two resolutions:

"The Medical Society of Virginia accepts the challenge issued by U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, M.D. to work with voluntary health agencies and all citizens of the Commonwealth to create a tobacco-free society by the year 2000.

The Medical Society of Virginia recommends that all hospitals and health care facilities in the Commonwealth of Virginia prohibit the sale of tobacco products through gift shops, vending machines or other patient and visitor services. It is also recommended that smoking in hospitals by employees, medical staff, patients, and visitors

Facing the plight of the Third World

By Cheryl Martin

The new year is a time of reflection as well as looking to ideals for the future. It is a good time for us as a nation to review our policy toward the "Third World."

Too often we, as a people, are willing to accept the propaganda put forth by the government, ours and theirs, or corporations who exploit these people, without really examining the facts.

There is a short prose piece by the famous author and poet Kahlil Gibran that metaphorically depicts our behavior. It is called "Two Infants," and goes like this:

"A prince stood on the balcony of his palace addressing a great multitude summoned for the occasion and said, 'Let me offer you and this whole fortunate country my congratulations upon the birth of a new prince who will carry the name of my noble family, and of whom you will be justly proud. He is the new bearer of a great and illustrious dynasty, and upon him depends the brilliant future of this realm. Sing and be merry!'"

"The voices of the throngs, full of joy and thankfulness, flooded the sky with exhilarating song, welcoming the new tyrant who would afflict the yoke of oppression to their necks by ruling the weak with bitter authority, and exploiting their bodies and killing their souls. For that destiny, the people were singing and drinking ecstatically to the health of the new Emir."

"Another child entered life and that kingdom at the same time. While the crowds were glorifying the strong and belittling themselves by singing praise to a potential despot, and while the angels of heaven were weeping over the people's weakness and servitude, a sick woman was thinking. She lived in an old, deserted house and, lying in her hard bed beside her newly-born infant wrapped with ragged swaddles, was starving to death. She was a penurious and miserable young wife neglected by humanity; her husband had fallen into the trap of death set by the prince's oppression, leaving a solitary woman to whom God had sent, that night, a tiny companion to prevent her from working and sustaining life.

"As the mass dispersed and silence was restored to the vicinity, the wretched woman placed the infant on her lap and looked into his face and wept as if she were to baptize him with tears. And with a hunger-weakened voice she spoke to the child saying, 'Why have you left the spiritual world and come to share with me the bitterness of earthly life? Why have you deserted the angels and the spacious firmament and come to this miserable land of humans, filled with agony, oppression, and heartlessness? I have nothing to give you except tears; will you be nourished on tears instead of milk? I have no silk clothes to put on you; will my naked, shivering arms give you warmth? The little animals graze in the pasture and return safely to their shed; and the small birds pick the seeds and sleep placidly between the branches. But you, my beloved, have naught save a loving but destitute mother."

"Then she took the infant to her withered breast and clasped her arms around him as if wanting to join the two bodies in one, as before. She lifted her burning eyes slowly toward heaven and cried, 'God! Have mercy on my unfortunate countrymen!'"

"At that moment the clouds floated from the face of the moon, whose beams penetrated the tansom of that poor home and fell upon two corpses."

We all too often, like the foolish countrymen drinking to the "yoke of oppression," close our eyes to reality. We are willing to accept the rhetoric

LET'S TALK

By Cary Blumentritt, president, Virginia Beach Education Association

Our society is but 15 short years away from the dawn of the 21st century. As educators, our challenge is how to best prepare our children today for the world they will live in tomorrow.

No one can say for sure what the future holds in store for us but futurists, those who seriously think about the future, can give us an idea of what we may expect.

By analyzing demographic information, current trends and significant events, futurists have identified certain forces at work in society today which will surely impact on the education we provide for our children. These forces include the explosion of information and the increasing role of new technologies.

Since about the end of World War II, our society has witnessed rapid changes as we move from the industrial age to the high-tech age of information.

In 1950, only about 17 percent of the work force were engaged in information type jobs, i.e. creating, processing, or distributing information. Now more than 60 percent of the labor force work in information type jobs while only 13 percent work in manufacturing. With the recent advances in robotics, this trend will obviously continue.

With the large numbers of scientific and technical reports being generated each day, some futurists are stating that in formation in this area will double every twenty months. John

Teachers must prepare students for tomorrow

Naisbitt, writing in Megatrends, states that we will be "drowning in information but starved for knowledge."

In light of this, futurists predict that the primary goal of education will be to produce citizens able to solve problems that cannot presently be foreseen.

"Tomorrow's citizens must be effective problem solvers, persons able to make good choices, to create solutions on the spot," writes Arthur Combs. "Education must concentrate on the growth and development of persons rather than on content and subject matter."

Students must understand where and how information can be found and put to use effectively. Key intellectual skills such as analytical and critical thinking, ability to make judgements after careful consideration of opposing points of view and options will need to be emphasized in educating the young.

The rapid and myriad number of changes created by new technologies, from computers to video, have already had a profound effect on our society. Today computers are regularly used in the home, school and on the job. New technologies will also influence how education is delivered to students.

Some futurists predict that the new technologies will allow teachers to develop and monitor individual education plans based on the students' developmental needs and preferred learning style and allow students the flexibility of home study or a combination of study at school and in the workplace.

Trends indicate that education will not end with a graduation diploma but will become a life-long process. The new technologies will continue to create rapid change in the job arena and some futurists are predicting that the average person will change jobs at least seven times. Schools must therefore prepare citizens who can adapt to change and have the attitudes and values necessary to do so.

Every day teachers enter the classroom, we are aware that the students we are teaching will not live in the same world we have known. We live in an exciting age and our children should be educated to take part in and take advantage of the achievements of the future.

This can be accomplished if we as educators and parents continue to recognize that our most important resource, today and in the future, is our children.

Virginia Beach Newsweek in Review

Erosion Commission under much criticism

The Virginia Beach Erosion Commission has been highly criticized by local officials as being inefficient and costly. For more than 30 years the state agency has managed and maintained two major city tourist attractions. They are the resort beach and Rudee Inlet.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck has ordered a study of the commission. This is the result of complaints by commercial fishing boat captains that shoaling is threatening the Rudee navigation channel.

The city is also preparing to enter a long-term agreement with the Army Corps of Engineers that may result in contract maintenance of the inlet channel.

February 1987 will mark the end of a 25-year agreement that recognized the commission as a partner of the city and the corps in the beach nourishment program.

The commission contends that with a 15 year old dredge, it has a hard time maintaining the channel because of poor equipment.

One alternative suggested by Councilman H. Jack Jennings, Jr. is that the commission be supervised directly by the city manager.

Rhodes and Rosenblatt endorsed for judgeship

The Virginia Beach Bar Association has endorsed

Donald H. Rhodes, former mayor, and General District Court Judge Alan E. Rosenblatt as candidates to replace Circuit Court Judge Henry L. "Les" Lem who retires this week.

James E. Brydges Jr., president of the bar association, said the names of both men will be submitted to the city's delegation to the General Assembly for their consideration in replacing Lam.

Rhodes, 52, has practiced law at the Beach for 24 years and is with the firm of Rhodes and Watson.

He was a member of the House of Delegates from 1974 to 1976. He served on the City Council from 1970 to 1973 and was mayor for two of those years.

Rhodes, the secretary of the city's 300-member bar, has been a commissioner in charge for the Virginia Beach Circuit Court since 1975 and a divorce commissioner since 1976.

Rosenblatt, 37, was named a General District Court judge in March 1984. He served as an assistant public defender from 1979 until his appointment to the bench. He was an assistant commonwealth's attorney from 1976 to 1978.

Vocational program receives recognition

The Virginia Beach Vocational Program is one of seven rehabilitation programs nationally to be recognized for outstanding service to individuals with disabilities. It is administered by the Adult Services office of the Mental Retardation/Developmental Disabilities Division of the Community Services Board.

The program provides permanent employment for some disabled individuals through the Virginia Beach Vocational Center. It prepares others for employment in the community.

The Vocational Center receives employment contracts from governmental and local agencies, Jill A. White, adult services supervisor, said. About 50 employees perform a variety of jobs. Another 75 people are employed locally.

Queen City residents remain without services

Queen City residents caught in a dispute between the cities of Virginia Beach and Chesapeake are without paved streets, sewers and water.

Queen City is a small community of 33 homes. One-third of those homes appear to be beyond rehabilitation, according to a preliminary study by the Virginia Beach Department of Housing and Community Development. The residents are black and most of them are poor.

The community is cut in two by the Virginia Beach-Chesapeake city line. Two-thirds of Queen City lies in Virginia Beach; one-third is in Chesapeake. The line actually slices through three houses in the community.

Federal government funding cuts and garbled deeds have left the project in limbo.

Books

By Mary K. Chelton

A new friend in Tidewater, knowing my passion for Alice Walker's The Color Purple, gave me the ultimate booktalk one day.

"You know," she said, "you'd probably like another book which came out at the same time, but which nobody noticed as much because of The Color Purple. It's called The Women of Brewster Place by Gloria Naylor."

She was so right. Naylor calls her book "a novel in seven stories," which is exactly what this remarkable first novel is.

Brewster Place, "the bastard child of several clandestine meetings between the alderman of the sixth district and the managing director of the Unico Realty Company," is a dead-end street somewhere in a black urban ghetto, complete with absentee landlord and drunken super.

In a setting desperately and deliberately drab, Naylor has written some of the most vivid vignettes of the human condition I have ever read. Her writing style is exquisite, as in this introductory piece:

Brewster Place became especially fond of its colored daughters as they milled like determined spirits among its decay, trying to make it a home. Nutmeg arms leaned over windowsills, and saffron hands strung out wet laundry on backyard lines. Their perspiration mingled with the steam from boiling pots of smoked pork and greens, and it curled on the edges of the aroma of vinegar doubhes and Evening in Paris cologne that drifted through the street where they stood together -- hands on hips, straight-backed, round-bellied, high-behinded women who threw their heads back when they laughed and exposed strong teeth and dark gums.

They cursed, badgered, worshipped, and shared their men. Their love drove them to fling dishcloths in someone else's kitchen to help him make the rent, or to fling hot lye to help him forget that bitch behind the counter at the five-and-dime. They were hard-edged, soft-centered, brutally demanding, and easily pleased, these women of Brewster Place. They came, they went, grew up, and grew old beyond their years. Like an ebony phoenix, each in her own time and with her own season had a story.

The women whose specific stories appear in the book include Mattie, unmarried and pregnant, who so invests in her son Basil that he can't help betraying her. Etta Mae, who finds fleeting hope and acceptance in one-night stands in rented rooms, "before she had to face the locking doors" in their eyes. Kiswana the community organizer, trying desperately to prove she's one of the people and not a middle class sellout.

Ciel, who loses two babies trying to keep their father with her--Cora Lee, the baby maker. Theresa and Lorraine, about whom the others spread unpleasant rumors about unnatural acts.

Each woman "stars" in her own story but also plays minor roles in the stories of various others, and one of the most memorable characters is Ben, the drunken super, who befriends Lorraine when she most needs it, even though she reminds him of his daughter, whom he drinks to forget.

Naylor's writing lifts this book far above a mere sociological tract into a highly structured series of interwoven tragedies.

When I finished several of the stories, I really had to sit and return to the present. They were not only transporting and mesmerizing, but left me with the feeling of having been run over by a truck--a pretty rare event in modern fiction.

The Women of Brewster Place is an unforgettable book one can love beyond reason, just like the woman it.

My friend was right.

Beach resident travels to Zambia

Brian Smith of Virginia Beach is one of five Virginia Tech students who spent six weeks in Smith found that moving around in the African nation wasn't the go-as-you-please convenience it is here.

"If you needed to go into town you had to jump on the chicken truck at 7 a.m.," he said.

Chickens, one of the main money-makers on the farm where he worked, were peddled at various open-air markets in the nearest city, Lusaka, the nation's capital. And the 32-mile ride into Lusaka took almost an hour-and-a-half, bumping along mostly dirt roads.

"With that kind of transportation you couldn't run down to the 7-11 whenever you got hungry," Smith, a senior agronomy student said. "I lost about 10 pounds while there."

Although Smith was only joking about quick trips to the store, it does illustrate the greater understanding the students gained about another culture.

Twice while the students were there, the whole country almost came to a stand-still because there was no fuel to power cars, buses or farm equipment

A private, anonymous donation to Tech's College of Agriculture and Life Sciences made the trips possible: The donation was designed to help solve food problems in Africa. Four agriculture students were selected, and a fifth student with a background in human nutrition and food was added to the group at the request of Zambian officials.

Brady Deaton, associate director of Tech's international agricultural programs designed the students' trip as a way to address Africa's food problems and Tech's education mission.

"A common bond among the students is a commitment to understanding and learning more about agriculture to meet food need," Deaton said. "Personal sensitivity was considered important by the interviewees -- people who can relate to others and can be honest about themselves.

The students have tried to remain in contact with people they met in Zambia. But the mail service between here and Zambia hasn't always cooperated.

In many ways, "it was a hard way of life," said Smith.

"My Old Manure"
If our soil is very poor,
If you have sand or clay galore,
If your yard is a bore,
You need my old manure.

If you live on the shore,
If you are rich or poor,
You can afford for sure,
My aged, old, black manure.

It does not smell at all, y'all,
It will not burn anything at all,
In fact your plants will have a haul,
With the grandest measure of them all.

It will keep your plants warm
this winter,
this old manure that I deliver.

It is, to your plants, a fancy dinner, without it they may moon and shiver.
If you want your yard to be reviv'd, and you'd like to put your plants
in heaven,
you would have to call me after seven, counselor trainee program. To be employed part-time the staff members must have completed at least three years of counseling and be working toward a degree.

Seton House is fortunate in that two of their part-timers already have undergraduate degrees and are working on their masters', Jones said.

Seton House is the dream of several Virginia residents who felt there was a need for this type of shelter in Virginia Beach. It receives some money for salaries under a grant from the National Youth Runaway Act. The rest of the funds come from private donations.

The house was originally called Mother Seton House. "Mother" was dropped from the name because many people thought it was connected with the Catholic Church, Jones said. The only connection to the Catholic Church is that it owns the building Seton House rents.

The maximum stay is the 14 days for girls at Seton House. During the time the girls are at the center, individual and family counseling is provided. Families can come back for the house's weekly family group sessions.

"Parents don't have it easy either," Jones said. "In a runaway situation, usually, no one is to blame. The best thing we can do at Seton House is to empower the family not to need us."

Furnishings in the bedrooms were provided by various Virginia Beach Civic organizations.

Home help freebies

As the cooler days of fall begin to set in, it's a good time to concentrate on indoor projects—so here are a few freebies to help you put your house in order.

Carpet care

There are things about carpets that most of us go through our entire lives without knowing. The realm of the unknown existing under your feet is explained in this 12-page freebie, The Complete Book of Carpeting.

Carpet textures are described—you'll learn that different textures work in different environments. Stairs, for instance, demand a densely tufted, low-pile carpet.

Judging quality of carpet vs. price can be tricky, so this booklet offers advice on what to look for and how to administer the "grin test" to a carpet.

Help for those who already own carpets and are not in the market for a new one can be found in the carpet-care section. There also is information on how to remove spots that you may find on your carpet—chocolate, wine or shoe polish, to name a few.

Directions: Send 25 cents, postage and handling.

Ask For: The Complete Book of Carpeting.

Mail To: Dupont Co., Room G-40284, Wilmington, DE 19898.

Solar heating booklet

Are you interested in a free source of heat for your home? Thought you would be. Your windows and patio doors can be used to collect the sun's heat—a common passive solar heating technique.

A passive solar heating system uses the structure of the home to collect, store and distribute heat from the sun with very little, if any, mechanical assistance. Even in the northern parts of the country, passive solar heating can supply a home with 30 percent of its heating needs, and up to 80 percent in a milder climate. This means significant savings in your heating bills!

The 16-page booklet, Passive Solar: Using Windows and Patio Doors to Cut Fuel Bills, examines several types of passive solar heating systems and how they work.

There also is a section that will remind you of the factors you need to check when selecting windows and doors for passive solar heating.

Furniture Friend

Homer Formby is the "Dear Abby" of wood care—he'll answer your questions about restorations, refinishing, staining and the like through his write-in service. He's a nationally recognized expert on the subject, and has over 50 years of experience working with wood.

For example, Formby talks about one of the most common problems with an old piece of furniture, a darkened ugly finish. This "ambering" is caused by years of exposure to light. But modern technology has made it quicker and easier to remove that old finish. And he'll tell you exactly how to do it.

Do you need to know if you should use a product that will take off varnish, lacquer or shellac; or whether to use paint remover; He's got a simple cotton ball test that will tell you.

Whatever your particular question is, Mr. Formby "would" like to help you. Simply write him a letter and explain your problem (include a stamped, self-addressed envelope) and he'll send you a personal reply full of good wood advice.

Freebies for plant lovers

By Terry Bisbee

Copy News Service

These freebies are for those Virginia Beach residents who love to grow things. And we've even got one offer for those wishing they could cultivate green thumbs but haven't quite managed yet.

Gardener's Wick

Ever sat back and looked at a room full of thirsty plants and wished for an automatic watering system?

Of perhaps the problem is that the violets are getting too little water and dracaenas are getting too much.

The automatic watering and feeding wick and plant food is a simple, self-watering and feeding system that can be installed in potted plants to keep them uniformly moist.

The wick consists of a woven material that is drawn through the drainage holes in the plant pot to connect the plant dirt with the tray below. It draws water from the container up into the pot by capillary action.

Receive four wicks with this offer, enough for two plants, and enough food concentrate to make 2 gallons.

Directions: Send 50 cents, postage and handling.

Mail To: Automatic watering and feeding wick, Vern Bills, Monarch Industries, P. O. Box 1744, Santa Ana, CA 92702.

Make a delightful potpourri sachet from the petals that fall from bouquets or from old blooms that have fallen in the yard. Dried Fruits and Flowers, a two-page instruction sheet, explains how to dry the petals—use the sun or an oven—and spice them up appropriately. It's a great way to use the "leftovers" in from the garden.

The detailed directions cover methods of dehydrating, steam blanching (recommended for pretreating vegetables) sulfur fuming, drying and storage tips.

Local student in model studies program

Garth Noel of Virginia Beach is in a model freshman-studies program this year at Catawba College. The son of Mr. and Mrs. George Noel, he has been involved in the vanguard program since September.

Called Educare, from the Latin "to lead out, to educate," the program offers freshmen high challenges in a supportive atmosphere.

"It pays more attention to the transitional nature of the freshman year," Stephen H. Wurster, Catawba president, said. "It's a structured, interdisciplinary program designed to provide as much assistance as possible in helping students successfully navigate the passage from high school to college."

Educare is part composition, part studies in classical civilization and part study skills, all bound together in a comprehensive whole.

Students focus on a number of "moments," relatively brief

Master Learner sessions, small groups that meet with an adviser twice a week, emphasize study skills and social adjustment. The advisers serve as models for the students.

Garth Noel

The Master Learner sessions, which are made up of 13 or 14 students, allow the advisers to get to know their students well. If a problem arises, they can detect it early on.

Notel says the Master Learner sessions, English and lectures all work together.

"If you don't get something in the lecture, you get it in the adviser group," he said "and the papers in English prepare you for the civilization tests."

The sheer volume of the material makes the course a real challenge, Notel added. He notes that he is learning about explicit definitions and different ways to identify and summarize passages, skills that he will be able to apply in other classes.

should be prohibited and/or regulated in a manner consistent with the health care mission of the provider."

These two brief statements by the MSV have tremendous importance to the people of Virginia. The MSV is not an organization of detached scientists in some Ivory Tower. This is the state-wide organization of all our doctors who know very well the importance and contributions of the tobacco industry to our state, as well as the effects of tobacco use which they see everyday in their patients (us). Our doctors have considered all the pros and cons and they know what they are saying by these resolutions. The woes of a declining tobacco industry may be a serious challenge to our state's economy, but there should no longer be any doubt in the minds of Virginians that the harmful health effects of tobacco are of overwhelming importance.

Cold weather means more caution on the road

Virginia Beach residents are on the move. For most, "neither snow, nor rain, nor dark of night" can keep them off the highways—in any season, in any weather.

Each year, thousands of deaths and injuries on the nation's highways can be attributed to severe winter weather. The best bet is to stay home. However, business or holiday plans often make winter traveling necessary. If traveling is a must, the following tips may make the journey safer.

Before the cold weather hits, be sure the car is in good running order and is properly serviced. Have a reliable mechanic check the battery, antifreeze, wipers and windshield washer, ignition, and thermostat.

Good tires are very important. Not only are they safer, but in many jurisdictions, there are heavy fines for people stranded on a snow emergency route without snow tires, chains, or all-weather radials.

Plan long trips carefully. Listen to weather reports and travel's advisories and keep an alternate route in mind. Inform someone of travel plans and arrival time. Travel in daylight, use major highways, if possible, and try not to travel alone.

Before starting out, clean snow and ice off all parts of the car—windows, hood, roof, trunk, and lights. Snow left on the car could affect visibility once driving is started.

Keep the gas tank as full as possible, especially if unfamiliar with the roads or passing through rural areas. A full tank also prevents gas line freeze up.

Even if restricting winter driving to short, local trips, certain supplies can help in an emergency. Always keep basic items like a windshield scraper, battery booster cables, a tow chain or rope, a bag of sand, a blanket, and a flashlight in the car.

For longer trips, add a transistor radio (with extra batteries), a first aid kit, road maps, some nonperishable foods, and matches and candles.

Don't overdrive when driving. Even on short trips, clothing should be loose-fitting and comfortable. After the car has warmed up, take off heavy outer clothing, but pull over to the side of the road to do it. Don't try to struggle out of a coat while driving.

If caught on the road during a winter storm, keep calm and give some indication of trouble—turn on flashing lights, raise the hood,

Fogle takes first place in track meet

William and Mary women's indoor track and field team opened its 1985-86 season at the 9th Annual William and Mary All-Corners Meet. William and Mary made a strong showing in running events.

In the 600-yard run, the Indians went 1-2-3.

Fogle graduated from Green Run High School.

Facing plight

Continued from page 2 handed to us, forgetting that what is really involved are the lives of oppressed, impoverished people upon whom humanity has turned its back.

Governments and corporations still try to deal with these countries as they did before World War I—keeping the power in the hands of a few, so as better to exploit the riches of the small countries.

The era of "Banana Republics" is over. It is time to look into the face of reality. Most of the people in these countries are too busy trying to keep themselves fed, clothed and sheltered to worry about any form of government.

Those who are interested in governing don't necessarily want to choose Communism or Democracy. They want to look at the good and the bad of each and come up with a system of their own.

We in this country, more than any other, should understand and appreciate their feelings. Yet, we are actually one of the major offenders in not allowing them to proceed in their own way.

or tie a cloth from an antenna or door handle.

Stay in the car. Don't leave the car to find shelter or a telephone unless one can be seen close by (really close—yards away). Disorientation comes very quickly in blowing snowstorm.

For heat, turn on the car engine for brief periods. To avoid deadly carbon monoxide poisoning, always leave a downwind window open slightly and make sure the exhaust pipe is clear of snow when the engine is running.

When caught unprepared, there are many items in the car that can be used. Papers and maps can be crinkled up and stuffed in clothing for added warmth. Rugs and removable seat covers can be used for added insulation. Huddle with passengers and try using coats as blankets. They may be more effective that way.

Exercise from time to time by clapping hands and moving arms and legs. Don't stay in one position too long, but don't get overexerted by shoveling or trying to push the car.

Leave the dome light on at night as a signal to rescuers. If there is more than one person in the car, sleep in shifts.

Winter presents many challenges for the snowbelt traveler. By staying calm and using all that's available to stay as warm as possible, the situation will remain one of inconvenience rather than a life or death peril.

Beach residents excell in military

Marine Pvt. John R. Kosmela, son of Frank E. Kosmela of Virginia Beach, has completed recruit training at Marine Corps Recruit Depot, Parris Island, S.C.

During the 11-week training cycle, Kosmela was taught the basics of battlefield survival. He was introduced to the typical daily routine that he will experience during his enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

He participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills, including first aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

While deployed Elkins participated in exercises United Effort and Ocean Safari.

During United Effort, the squadron defended North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) ships and aircraft from mock attacks staged by the United Kingdom, Norway, and other countries.

The battle group then conducted Ocean Safari exercises off the coast of Great Britain. The squadron defended the carrier against "raids" by British aircraft.

Navy Hospitalman Apprentice Todd J. Anderson, son of James H. Anderson of Virginia Beach, was graduated from Field Medical Service School.

During the five-week course at Marine Corps Base, Camp Lejeune, N.C., Anderson was prepared for duty with Marine Corps combat units as a Naval hospital corpsman and dental technician.

Anderson studied the fundamentals of battlefield survival, personal protective measures, and received instructions on basic tactics and the use of weapons for self-defense.

To graduate, he was required to demonstrate basic proficiency in emergency medical techniques, casualty evacuation, field sanitation and preventive medicine procedures.

Navy Vice Adm. Paul F. McCarthy, whose wife, Sandra, is the daughter of Lucille B. Williams of Virginia Beach, is currently deployed to the Western Pacific while stationed aboard the amphibious command ship USS Blue Ridge, homeported in Yokosuka, Japan.

While deployed, McCarthy participated in the welcoming of the sultan of Brunei Darussalam while the ship was operating off the coast of Brunei, on the northwestern coast of the island of Borneo in the south China Sea. The Sultan's visit was his first to any U.S. Navy ship at sea.

VBGH using lasers to improve treatment

Virginia Beach General Hospital will soon begin using a new laser, providing tremendous advances in treatment of tumors and ulcers, in addition to more complicated internal disorders.

The acquisition of a multipurpose Yag Laser by VBGH will increase the hospital's capabilities in noninvasive surgery, as well as enhance patient recovery periods while reducing trauma and complications sometimes seen from traditional surgical techniques.

"The new Yag Laser is one of the most sophisticated lasers on the market," Rita B. Wood, VBGH president said. "The capabilities of this laser, combined with the professional capabilities of our medical staff and our existing laser treatment, results in the most comprehensive laser program in the area. Special medical training is necessary for laser use."

The Coastal Laser Center includes four lasers—the Argon Laser, the Eye Yag Laser, the CO2 Laser and the multipurpose Yag Laser.

The Hospital began using laser surgery six years ago, and in 1983 it was the first hospital in the area to use the CO2 Laser for neurosurgery.

Existing laser treatment at VBGH includes treatments for diseases or disorders in the areas of neurology, gynecology, urology, ophthalmology and dermatology.

The multipurpose Yag is extremely effective in the treatment of bleeding disorders of the gastrointestinal tract, such as ulcers. In the treatment of lesions of the tracheal and bronchial areas, and in the removal of tumors in other sensitive areas.

Science Museum of Virginia

To judge the altitude of the comet, use this method. Hold your hand at arm's length in line with the horizon. Make a fist. A fist spans approximately 10 degrees of altitude in the sky. For example, nine fists would equal 90 degrees of altitude, and the arm would be straight up in the air. Use the number of fists shown on the sky map to locate the altitude of the comet.

Early January excellent for viewing Comet

"January is an excellent time for viewing Halley's Comet in Virginia Beach. Just after sunset on Jan. 1-12 are the best days for viewing success.

The comet is visible in the southwestern sky in the early evening hours. Look for the comet in the constellation Aquarius.

As the month progresses, the comet's altitude will decrease to only one degree. By Jan. 25, it will be barely above the horizon."

During the second half of January, the comet will be above and to the right of Jupiter in the western sky. Watch the relative motion of these two objects as they sink into evening twilight by month's end.

The comet should be visible with the naked eye. However, binoculars will aid considerably in viewing.

Beach residents wanting to see the comet should take advantage of the January 'window.' By the end of the month, the comet will have dropped below the horizon.

As it reaches perihelion, or its closest proximity to the sun on Feb. 9, the sun will hide the comet until late in February.

The comet should emerge from the sun's glow about Feb. 20, and will be visible in the morning sky just before sunrise. Look for the comet in the constellation Capricornus around Feb. 23.

By this time, the comet should be brighter than in January, and its tail should be more prominent.

For up-to-date information on the comet, call the Halley Hotline, 804-257-1076, at the Science Museum of Virginia.

This 24-hour service is prepared by members of the museum planetarium staff.

Halt holiday blahs before they start

The Christmas candy has settled permanently on your hips, the Christmas tree looks shabby and bare, Kippy and Junior have returned to college before having that happy family gathering, the fa la la's have become the boo hoo hoo's.

The post-holiday season is known for an increase in depression and suicidal thoughts, but it doesn't have to be that way, according to David W. Harrison, assistant professor of psychology at Virginia Tech.

A little planning and a psycho on pre-holiday expectations can reduce the tendency for after-holiday blahs.

The causes of post-holiday depression are many.

For weeks beforehand, Virginia Beach residents have carried out their routine work and added to it the stress of gift buying and relatives visiting and parties and too much food and alcohol. Fatigue sneaks up on them.

Add to this the usually unrealistic expectations — that everyone will be merry and joyful, the family will relax together and everybody will be warm and caring. They when Mom is cranky from preparing too much food for too many people, when everything is too rushed to enjoy each other's company, the workday body can't deal with the shattered expectations.

And then everybody goes home. The Christmas project is over, and time drags. Already tired, people start thinking about everything that went wrong and just with Christmas, but with the whole year. The garage didn't get cleaned out. The person feels grumped at their family too much, or made too many mistakes at work. Boy, it's depressing.

So it's time to make New Year's resolutions: lose 20 pounds before spring, be kinder to the dog, be Super Employee and never smoke another cigarette. This sets the person up for another bout with depression a few weeks later when they've gained another two pounds, lost that important account and burned a hole in the new chair.

To lessen the post-holiday blahs, be aware of the effect the disruptions of the holidays will have on routine.

Try to reduce the stressful things from outside, maintain a proper diet, take normal health precautions. Get plenty of rest.

To keep from becoming depressed by the shorter days — which make some people feel they have less time to accomplish things — organize and plan ahead. But make sure goals are reasonable.

Take a look at what is expected from the holidays. Try to be realistic. And, when things don't go as planned, try to be accepting.

If you think Christmas should be spent with family and friends, but are far away, make plans to be with someone else, especially during that crucial week of Christmas.

And if going to be with a large crowd of people when accustomed to living alone, make sure there is time and privacy to be alone some of the time.

When easing into the new year, make resolutions reasonable goals, as not to be depressed by failure to keep them. If planning ahead, realistically set reasonable goals and remain aware of the stress of the season.

Winter Water For Wildlife

It's winter and it's very difficult for wildlife to find water. Put yourself in the place of your friendly blue jay, cardinal or gray squirrel: all their familiar summer watering sites are frozen or hidden beneath snow; the summer leaves and other lush vegetation that furnish water for many small songbirds are gone.

It's a critical time for active winter creatures who need water as much in winter as they do in summer—due in part to the stress of coping with the weather and a scarce food and water supply.

That's where you come in—not only as provider of winter food but also of water. It's not always easy. Winter birds do not just freeze; they get dirty faster than summer ones. Why? Because winter users are apt to outnumber summer bathers. Whole family groups—instead of the occasional summer singles or pairs—descend on your water supply. One flock of robins can leave a dirty birdbath behind. Also, your most frequent winter visitors are fruit-eating birds, notorious for their messy droppings.

So, frequent cleaning and ice-breaking are inevitable. However, here are a few ways to save steps and stave off nature's icing-up process.

- Place your birdbath close enough to the house so that you can shovel (including lugging water buckets because your outside faucets are turned off for the winter) are made lighter.
- Sit your birdbath on the south side of the house, to capture as much warmth as possible from the winter sun. All the better if you can tuck the bath to leeward of good, dense, windshifting shrubbery.

Put a live oak water trough trough heater in a large birdbath. Thermostatically controlled, it keeps the water at about 35 degrees, without running up your electrical bill—or blowing the birds. (Be sure to always use proper outdoor extension cords.)

• Spend a bit extra on a birdbath with a built-in thermostatic heating coil available through some bird-feeding supply stores or catalogs.

• You might like to try painting the interior of your birdbath with black exterior latex paint. Friends of mine tell me this turns the bath into a solar collector and warms the water on sunny days and helps cut down on the number of de-icing trips to the container. (I haven't yet tried this one out myself.)

• Build yourself a bird-sauna—such as the one designed by Harv and Robin Cashin, members of the National Wildlife Federation's Backyard Wildlife Habitat Program™, take a 6- to 10-inch-deep galvanized pan with a 2- to 2½-foot diameter. Wrap some thermostatic heating tape around the outside circumference. Place rocks inside the pan from within ¼ to 2 inches of the surface (or even let some rocks protrude), thereby providing the birds with different depths of water for bathing and drinking. Plug the heating tape into an outdoor extension cord. Set the pan snugly into a stained wooden frame. (Anchor a small perching branch among the rocks, over the water.) Now, sit in the warm house and watch the birds splash in their warm sauna. With this setup you never have to de-ice—just clean up once in a while after your guests.

Boardwalk contract awarded

A contract for a boardwalk overlook project has been awarded to Luke Construction Co., Inc., for $327,267, the lower of two bids received. The overlooks are part of the Resort Area Advisory Commission's Demonstration project for pedestrian parks east of Atlantic Avenue. They will consist of concrete slab, pile-supported overlooks from the resort area boardwalk with beach access ramps, steps and hand railings at 13th Street, 14th Street and 20th Street. The engineering consultant's estimate for the project was $275,000. The difference between the bid and the estimate is attributed to the price of a specialty item. The city plans to reduce the project costs by using alternate railings and renegotiating that item with the contractor.

Hospital named Best in the East

Virginia Beach General Hospital recently received the "Best in the East" first place honor for its radio advertising campaign on the Birthing Center. In its fifth year, Best in the East is an annual competition sponsored by the Virginia Society for Hospital Public Relations and Marketing. The awards competition acknowledges superior accomplishments of hospital public relations professionals in the eastern United States and Canada. The radio ads focus on the many birthing options available to parents who use the new facility. The campaign was designed to announce the benefits to the public with a special emphasis on appealing to prospective fathers. As a result, parents from cities geographically beyond the normal patient base often elect to have their child at VBGH. The campaign was designed with the help of VBGH staff physicians and administrators by Davis & Phillips, Inc. a full-service marketing firm.

Southeastern Steel named top dealer

Southeastern Steel Buildings, headquartered in Virginia Beach, has been named the largest dealer in North America for PermaSteel buildings. PermaSteel, headquartered in Toronto, Canada, sells throughout the United States and Canada. President Rhae Adams, Jr., of Southeastern Steel was recognized at the company's recent sales meeting held in Toronto.

Duke & Asso. awarded building contract

Duke & Associates, Inc. of Virginia Beach has been awarded the contract to build new offices for the Virginia Beach advertising and public relations firm of Barker, Campbell & Farley. The new offices will be located in the first floor of the CPI building, 240 Business Park Drive in Virginia Beach. The 7,000 square foot office facility will be the new headquarters for the firm. Completion of the project is scheduled for February, 1986.

Takes more than bullets to make a cop

Virginia Beach Chief of Police

Charles R. Wall attributes the low crime rate in Virginia Beach, as compared with other cities of similar size, to two main factors. One is the unusual makeup of the city. Virginia Beach is basically urban and suburban without an inter-city area, Wall said.

The other factor is the excellent training Virginia Beach police officers receive.

Most cities of a quarter to a half million people have about 50 percent more manpower per capita than Virginia Beach, Wall said. The city has 1.3 officers per 1,000 people, where most have 2 officers per 1,000.

"Our technology and training are important," he said. "We may have fewer officers on a per capita basis, but a lot of energy, time and money is spent on training them. As a force, we have very high standards."

The chief points out the department also has strict working policies, stricter than those required by law.

To insure compliance with the department's policies, the chief has appointed a sergeant to carry out inspections.

"The sergeant reports directly to me," Wall said. "He is my ears and eyes on the street."

training his officers receive.

"We offered the first live-in police academy in the area last winter," he said. "We were able to use some of the facilities at Camp Pendleton for the program. It worked out real well. It was much better for the officers."

Wall said they will not be able to offer the live-in arrangement for the upcoming academy in February. But he hopes to return to the system for the following academy session.

Shooting Range

The shooting range available to the officers is another source of pride for Wall. It is the only outdoor range in the area. Aside from Virginia Beach police officers, it is used by other cities.

Controversial water fee adopted

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

City Council has adopted an ordinance establishing a water resource fee to pay for the Lake Gaston water project.

A proposal to delay action for further fine-tuning of the ordinance, which was deferred on Dec. 16, found no support.

Councilman John A. Baum, a consistent advocate of the ordinance, felt that a delay would be useless, pointing out that the vote was about as close as Council would get to unanimity.

Major changes in the ordinance made since Dec. 16 were the elimination of the retroactive clause and a provision for phasing in the impact fee over a one-year period.

Still to be satisfied are residents now on well water who will be treated under the ordinance the same as new water customers when city water is available to them and therefore subject to the new impact fees.

Mayor Harold Heischober assured the well-users, who had showed up at the council session to voice their objections, that the council would have additional amendments within 30 days to address their concerns.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck presented four possibilities which are being studied by the staff. They are:

• Holding the mandatory connection ordinance in abeyance for 10 years except in neighborhoods where 75 percent of the property owners sign contracts for service.

• Giving existing residents served by private wells until June 30, 1986 to obtain sufficient neighborhood contracts to qualify for public water service.

If a sufficient percentage of residents request service, then the water resource recovery fee would be the fee in effect at the time the contracts are signed and such amount could be due at the time the city provides service.

• Changing financing options to extend years for payback from four years to eight or 10 years at eight percent interest.

• Having the staff examine projects included in the current Capital Improvement Program

Not the stereotype of a British butler

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

Serving champagne to 3,000 guests without wasting one drop or how to properly select and store fine cigars are not duties the average homemaker must learn to handle.

These and other similar duties, however, are all in a day's work for Phillip Garfield of Virginia Beach.

But then, Garfield is not the average homemaker. In fact, she is the first American woman to be trained as a Butler Administrator in the traditional British fashion.

Garfield graduated in December from the renowned Ivor Spencer International School for Butler Administrators: Trained British Style. Though Garfield was not the only American in her class of 14, she was the only woman.

"On the first day of class, I kept waiting for another woman to show up, but she never did," Garfield said. "It would have made it easier. My classmates were fabulous. They just treated me like one of the fellas. Mr. Spencer said having a woman in the class was a real asset, because it brought in another perspective."

What made the wife of an American Navy man decide to become a British-trained butler? "We were stationed in England," she said. "The son of a friend of mine, who taught at the American High School, took the course. One day she said, 'Being a Navy wife this [butlering] is right up your alley.'"

I didn't think much of it then, but the more I thought about it the more I liked the idea."

Garfield admits that people are surprised when she tells them about her training.

"When I tell people they usually say, 'What!' But when I explain my rationale for becoming a butler it usually makes sense to them. I'll admit it is a little different, but I love it."

Garfield said her family's reaction was similar in the beginning, but they came around.

"Once they understood, they were very supportive," she said. "It meant a lot of work for them too."

Her oldest son, Peter, 19, returned to the states in September to attend college at the University of Florida. Her husband and other son, Michael, 15, returned later that month for new orders. Garfield stayed in England to finish school.

"This meant my husband had to find a house for us in Virginia Beach and move in without me," she said. "He also had to be both mother and father to Michael while I was gone. If they hadn't been supportive of me I wouldn't have done it."

Being Female Helps

As a butler administrator, Garfield feels that being a woman is not a detriment but an asset.

"Everything I've learned is very natural for a woman," she said. "It is like running your own household, but on a grander scale. Hopefully prospective employers will view it this way also."

Woods not reappointed to Beach School Board

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Five Planning Commission members and four School Board members were among year-end appointments made by City Council at the last meeting.

Losers in the shuffle were School Board Chairman Roy A. Woods and Planning Commission member from the Princess Anne Borough, Richard J. LaClaire. Both were replaced, Woods by Ulysses Spiva, a professor of education at Old Dominion University and former dean of the education school at ODU, for an at-large seat, and LaClaire by Bryan Evans Jr., former president of the citizens Action Coalition, a group which has supported slow growth.

The School Board will elect a new chairman. A second new appointment to the Planning commission was Donald H. Horsley of Blackwater replacing James E. Snyder, who retired. Horsley, a farmer, was 1984 man-of-the-year in Virginia Beach agriculture.

Reappointed to the Commission were Thomas A. Ammons, chairman, and Albert W. Balko, at-large members, and Charles Krummel, from the Lynnhaven Borough. They were appointed to four-year terms.

Floyd E. Taylor, a former civilian personnel director at the Oceana Naval Air Station, was appointed to replace Susan Flanagan representing the Pungo Borough. Flanagan wanted to leave the board to resume her teaching career.

Woods has served on the School Board since 1966 which is 16 years longer than any other School Board member.

He was reappointed in 1982 despite Council's informal rule limiting board members to three-year terms.

Reappointed to the School Board were B.S. Campbell, Kempsville, and Andrew Eg Jr., at-large.

Other appointments made by Council included:

Plumbing and Mechanical Appeals Board—two year terms, William L. Hendricks, Donald D. Jones Jr. and David V. White Jr., all reappointed, and Arnold L. Rosenberg, new.

Virginia Beach Development Corporation—appointed for four years, Wylie Cooke, Charles M. Reynolds and Mason Moton; three years, James Lindsey and John Boone, and two years, Dorcas Heffatt and John Perry, and as an ex-officio member Ronald Proctor.

Deputy Fire Chief W. R. Gurley retires after 38 years of service

During the past 38 years and four months, Deputy Fire Chief W. R. Gurley, Sr. has seen a lot of changes in Virginia Beach.

He began working as a firefighter for the town of Virginia Beach in 1947, long before its 1963 merger with Princess Anne County officially made it a city.

Over the years, he moved up the Fire Department ladder, becoming captain, shift captain, district chief, and finally deputy chief in 1977.

His retirement, marks the end of a career he summarizes as "interesting, with a lot of challenges."

"In 1963," he recalls, "there were just 19 paid firefighters, while in 1985 there were 300."

He credits Virginia Beach's population growth with the rising level of fire services needed by the City. In addition to responding to the growing demand for fire suppression services, the Fire Department has also become increasingly involved in fire prevention and education.

"This profession has many rewards, because you're helping people," Gurley said. Two of his three sons share his interest in this field. Rex is a volunteer firefighter for the city. One of Gurley's last official duties was to present a captain's badge to his son Michael, who has been a Virginia Beach firefighter since 1978.

Gurley has plans to stay busy after retirement, with traveling, camping, fishing, and spending time with his four grandchildren on the agenda.

"The city's been real good to work with," he said "I'll really miss the people."

Relieving traffic problem

Most motorists will agree that traffic is a problem in Virginia Beach. One, that without some major road improvements, will only get worse.

A preliminary report on a study done by consultant Robert Longfield addressed these problems. The report, presented to City Council on Dec. 9, recommended 28 major road projects to solve the city's traffic problems.

While Beach residents agree there are traffic problems, they aren't pleased with some of the recommendations for improving the problem.

Protests of the proposed projects began pouring in from residents at a December public hearing on Longfield's traffic plan. Around 400 residents attended the meeting.

Many of these residents were from the Little Neck area. They came to voice their opposition to the recommendation that Old Dominion Parkway be made a four-lane street between Little Neck Road and Independence Boulevard.

As originally conceived in the 1970s, Old Dominion was to have run from the Oceanfront to the city's western limits. Twice in the past six years (in 1979 and again in 1983) City Council has voted against the parkway.

Longfield agreed to drop the controversial roadway from his high way plan.

Some 20 residents from the Brookfield Crossings area in Kempsville attended the hearing to protest the Baxter Road Project. They were barely heard over the masses from Little Neck. Their fight goes on.

Brookfield Crossings residents are preparing to fight the extension of Baxter Road which could destroy several homes in the neighborhood.

Longfield recommended extending Baxter Road beyond its current terminus at Princess Anne Road. According to city planners, the extension would be four lanes wide and would run along Churchill Drive to Providence Road.

The four-lane widening of Churchill Drive would destroy several homes along the street.

Longfield said this project was needed to relieve traffic pressure on nearby Edwin Drive, which runs parallel to Baxter Road.

Area residents fear Edwin Drive will be saved at the expense of their community.

The reality is Virginia Beach is growing and without changes the traffic condition will only worsen. In compiling his study, Longfield based consideration on an estimated population of 500,000 by 2010.

Progress never comes without some loss.

Virginia Beach's challenge is to achieve this growth with minimal damage. The City Council and staff are working to devise a road project plan that will affect as few homes as possible.

But the fact remains that some homes will have to go. When residents fight to save homes in one neighborhood they are asking the city, in many cases, to destroy someone else's home.

It is time for Beach residents to pull together as a city. A unified plan, which best relieves traffic pressures with the smallest possible loss in homes is the goal that must be reached. —C.M.

Farewell Chief Gurley

Many Virginia Beach residents over the years have come to know and respect Deputy Fire Chief W. R. Gurley. Gurley retired at the end of the year after serving for more than 38 years as a Virginia Beach firefighter.

When Gurley started in 1947 as a firefighter Virginia Beach was just a small town. It would be 16 years before the community reached city status by merging with Princess Anne County.

At the ceremony marking Gurley's retirement and the promotions of several firefighters, Fire Chief Harry E. Diezel spoke on the comradery of firefighters. He pointed to the fact that fire service is often a family affair.

This is truly the case for Gurley. Many have followed in his footsteps, beginning with his brother Charles.

Master Firefighter Charles L. Gurley has served the department for 23 years as a paid firefighter. Prior to 1963 he was for 11 years a volunteer fireman.

Two of Chief Gurley's three sons have also followed their father. Rex is a volunteer fireman for the city. Newly promoted Captain Michael Gurley has served the fire department since 1978.

One of Gurley's last duties was to present Michael with his new rank.

With four grandchildren, there may be more Gurleys to follow the path taken by the chief.

Spending time with his grandchildren is high on the list of Gurley's retirement activities. He also plans to spend time traveling, camping and going fishing. —C.M.

Obstacle to arms control

Editor: President Reagan's relentless drive to develop "Star Wars" has become the major obstacle to arms control.

Letters

At the Geneva summit, our President wasted an unprecedented opportunity to negotiate with the Soviets, to extract major concessions that could have cut the number of nuclear missiles in half.

And now we are faced with an arms race that is expanding from the earth into the heavens. We are being asked to pay for the most expensive military buildup the world has ever known.

And we must contend with the resulting federal deficit that threatens to wreck the American economy when our catastrophic debts come due.

This is happening even though there is no scientific evidence that an effective space-based defense can be built. The majority of leading scientists oppose the Star Wars program and have called for a ban on space weapons. They believe that development of Star Wars and anti-satellite weapons would increase the risk of nuclear war and escalate the arms race.

The Reagan Administration has ignored the best scientific advice, spurred Soviet arms control initiatives, and rushed ahead with a dangerous and expensive gamble.

That is why the Union of Concerned Scientists is working hard. We want to stop the arms race in space before it really gets off the ground.

It is not yet too late, but time is growing very short. UCS needs the public's help immediately to stop the dangerous fantasies of the Reagan Administration and to ensure that the sanctity of space is maintained for future generations.

We must convince the Congress and the Administration not to pursue the Star Wars illusion, and we must do so now.

Star Wars

President Reagan first introduced the concept of a space-defense system in March 1983. It caught many of his advisers off guard and sent Pentagon researchers into a frenzied attempt to define systems which had even a vague potential for doing what the President believed possible.

Many of the ideas they came up with seem more at home in the realm of science fiction than in science fact. They include particle beam weapons, homing kill vehicles, and super-powerful lasers activated by chemical reactions or nuclear explosions.

And the funding required for this program is equally out of this world. Four billion dollars has already been appropriated to evaluate the feasibility of the program. The total cost to develop and deploy the system has been estimated as high as $1 trillion by former Secretary of Defense Schlesinger.

Real security might be worth such a price, but Star Wars is, in fact, a very dangerous fantasy.

Study finds peril

In a study conducted for UCS, a distinguished panel of scientists and military experts assessed the feasibility of the Star Wars systems and their effect on American security and arms control. They concluded that an effective defense of our population is technologically unattainable.

The panel found that it would be far easier to design, build, and deploy measures to defeat a Star Wars system than it would be to construct the system itself. In addition, the panel found that Star Wars would be useless against

Paying One's Bills on time

For small firms in Virginia Beach that do business with the federal government, there's good news and bad news.

Commentary

The good news is that the feds continue to spend about $150 billion annually for goods and services. For many small companies, this is a lucrative and steady market. The bad news is that if a firm does contract with the government, it may have to wait months to get paid.

Several years ago, federal laxity in meeting its financial obligations reached such a point that the Congress passed a law requiring federal departments and agencies to pay their bills on time or face paying interest on the bill.

The interest had to come out of the agencies' existing operating budgets since Congress refused to appropriate additional money for that purpose. This appeared to bring about a substantial improvement in the manner in which the government paid its bills.

Recently, however, the problem has been rearing its ugly head again. From the number and type of complaints emanating from small firms, late payment has all the earmarks of once again becoming a serious stumbling block for cash-flow conscious small businesses.

While many federal agencies are complying with the law and paying their bills on time, others are not.

Some contractors are reporting having to wait as long as six months to receive payment and when they do interest is not included.

A litany of complaints including the following have been reaching Capitol Hill lately: small firms are being paid beyond the date specified in the contract and without payment of interest; the feds are requiring notices in writing from small firms demanding payment of interest; the government takes discounts offered by contractors for early payment even though actual payment is made after the expiration of specified discount periods; some agencies accept partial deliveries of items of equipment or supplies but fail to make timely payments on invoices for such partial deliveries and neglect to make interest payments; other departments request resubmission of invoices which automatically resets the clock on the payment period, and some refuse payment of interest on utility services maintaining they are exempt from the law.

This is only a partial list of recent federal abuses of the Prompt Payment Act which Congress passed three years ago.

As the Chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee has noted, "Small businesses have enough difficulty in retaining and attracting capital and should not be forced to borrow capital simply because the federal government cannot or will not pay its bills on time."

Most government contracts impose specific delivery dates and penalties that may be imposed on contractors if delivery dates are not met. The government is less obligated to meet the terms of payment than contractors are in delivering goods on time. Congress should assure that the agencies comply with the law.

Overcoming the blues of winter

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

Well the holidays are behind us. January is here. Everyone is settling to that ho-hum time of year. The novelty of winter wore off with the passing of Christmas. Now everything is just dead and dreary. Spring is still a ways off.

We quietly float along, getting by until the first flowers of spring bring the rejuvenation of the year.

This has always been a perplexing time of year for me, and I'm sure there are many others in Virginia Beach who share my view.

I hate to waste time. Time spent unproductively is wasted. So what can be done during the dormant months of January and February to avoid wasting precious time?

Sometimes could be spent in scientific endeavors, like watching for Halley's comet. But only so much time can be spent in freezing in the death of night or in the pre-dawn hours in the hopes of catching a glimpse of a flash of light in the sky.

Let's see. It is really too cold to go walking but not cold enough for sledding or other winter sports. How can we pass the time?

There is that pile of unfinished projects collecting dust in the spare room. Perhaps it is time to brave the clutter and investigate just what there is to be completed. Finishing old projects does provide one with a sense of accomplishment.

While we're in a "constructive" mood, aren't there about a million little projects that need doing around the house.

We're on a roll now! What better time to see to those mundane little duties, like fixing the light switch in the garage, than now. There is no shopping or gift wrapping to keep us from them. Nor are there picnics to attend or gardens to be planted.

Gardens to be planted...now there's an idea. We could get a head start by planning the spring garden. If we are really ambitious, plants could be started from seeds.

House plants also require special care during the colder months. How are yours faring?

What about those books you've been meaning to read. What better way to spend a gloomy January day than curled up with a good book in front of the fireplace?

Still haven't sparked your interest? Perhaps you would like a group-oriented activity. There are many volunteer programs that would truly appreciate some help. Why, there are volunteer programs to suit anyone's talents or interests.

Classes are starting at the community college. This would be a good time to bone up on some knowledge or just take a class for fun.

The winter/spring schedule for the Virginia Beach Recreation Department is hot off the press. The number and variety of activities offered is almost endless. Everything from fitness to swimming to coping with aged parents is covered.

January and February could turn out to be very productive months. Why we could become so busy, spring will arrive before we know it!

By Cary Blumensetin, president, Virginia Beach Education Association

Each year the Virginia General Assembly faces the major issue of funding the 'Standards of Quality', a constitutionally required document made up of 12 'standards' to which each locality must subscribe in establishing its school program.

Enacted in 1972 with the new Virginia Constitution, the standards came up for funding each biennium and are invariably revised in the interim session as well.

Just as invariable has been the practice by the General Assembly of not fully funding the requirements laid out in the Standards. Obviously, what money the state does not provide, the local governments must pick up.

In the first year of implementation in the 1974-75 school year, the 'established' per pupil cost across the Commonwealth was $687. The 'actual' cost was $833, an average difference of $146 per pupil that the localities had to pick up.

In the 1984-85 school year, the established cost per pupil was $1,605 with the actual cost turning out to be $1,896, a difference of $291.

This difference, in varying amounts, has existed every year to the present, even in the face of a 1973 Attorney General's opinion which said, in part, "...the General Assembly must take into account the actual cost of education..."

This continuing deficit in school funding has placed the Commonwealth in the difficult position of being more than a half billion dollars short of full funding of the standards for the 1986-88 biennium. Last summer the State Department of Education drafted a biennium budget of $2.7 billion, an increase of $515 million and declared that, as of the 1986-88 school biennium, the Standards would be fully funded.

The Research Division of the Virginia Education Association, disagreed (see chart) and revealed that the Department figures would only achieve 92 percent of projected needs.

Since last summer, however, much has happened. Late this fall, the State Department's figure was reduced to $419 think it is fair to leave the large localities out.

The last dimension of this confusing issue is Governor Robb's proposal. Where will he come down in all of this? The Governor is scheduled to deliver his budget message to a joint legislative session this week. In the meantime, the State Department is preparing an answer to JLAR's funding proposal.

There is no time within recent memory that there has been such a diversity of approaches on funding the Standards of Quality and with such far-reaching consequences.

In a recent article, I wrote about the future of education and of the changes that have occurred since World War II, moving from the industrial age to the High-Tech Age; from manufacturing and other traditional jobs to information type jobs. Education and educators must lead the way as the changes occur, not be in a catch-up role.

To do this we need the facilities, the equipment and the continual training to do the job.

A recent Virginian Pilot/Ledger Star poll showed that 60 percent of those polled said that the state should set aside additional money to meet the demands of the Standards of Quality and 51 percent said they would agree to a tax increase to meet those needs.

The dilemma in Richmond this year, as always, is to reach agreement on how much money is needed. Then, determine how much legislators are willing to pay and finally, how it will all be funded.

Both Governor Robb and Governor-Elect Gerald Baliles pledged to fully fund the Standards of Quality.

I represent an overwhelming number of teachers when I say, "Do it now! Find the money, and fully fund the Standards, so that we can get on with the job of fully educating our children, now and for the future."

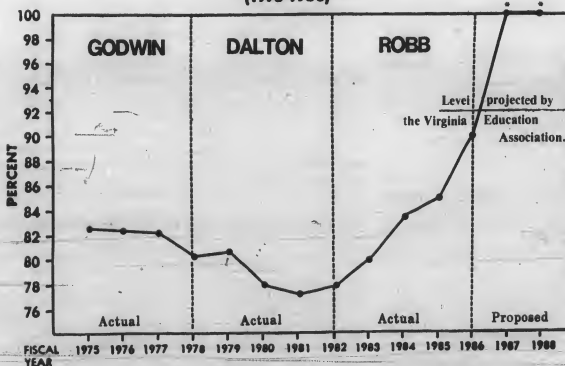

We teach the children.

million because of underprojections of state revenue and the overprojections of costs of educators' salaries and the rise of the CPI (Consumer Price Index). In December, it was further reduced by $20 million because of new figures on sales tax revenue. Then on Dec. 9 of the Joint Legislative Audit and Review Commission (JLAR) of the General Assembly published a report which said that the Standards of Quality could be fully funded with a $192 million increase, plus categorical funding, by simply applying a new formula.

JLAR's formula would apply a weighted median concept to all but the more affluent of the state's localities and do away with the State Department's system of statewide averaging. Needless to say, VEA is skeptical and doesn't

PERCENT OF THE ESTIMATED COST OF THE STANDARDS OF QUALITY ACTUALLY FUNDED (1975-1986)

*Proposed by the Board of Education to achieve 100 percent funding of the Standards of Quality in the 1986-88 biennium at 51 instructional personnel/1000 ADM. The VEA projected cost of funding the Standards (based on 57.8 instructional personnel/1000 ADM) indicates that the Commonwealth will be at 92.7 percent of full funding in 1986-88.

Two years ago Ginny Foat was found not guilty in the state of Louisiana for the murder of Moises Chayo which had occurred in 1965.

A successful businesswoman, a prominent political activist, and a past president of the California NOW (National Organization of Women) Foat was twice accused, imprisoned, and tried for murder through the machinations of her former husband, Jack Sidote.

Sidote, a known alcoholic and a "self-described killer" reportedly threatened Foat, "if you ever leave me, I'll kill you or I'll see you rot in jail..."

Fear kept her rooted within that relationship for more than five years, a battered wife with little self-esteem left to her. Finally however, Foat broke free of her 'cage', rebuilt her life, and eventually became active in NOW and that organization's fight to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment.

Foat's autobiography looks at women's role

True to his word, Sidote 'confessed' to authorities about two murders, which he claimed Foat had committed, himself being only an accomplice.

Ginny Foat reveals her husband's revenge and its effect on her life in Never Guilty, Never Free.

The reader is given a deeper understanding of why thousands of women today remain in marriages and relationships while being tormented by their partners. The physical, emotional, and psychological realities of domestic violence are examined through Foat's experiences.

Foat, who afterward suppressed her vile life with Jack Sidote, tries to free herself through writing this book. Her autobiography reveals more clearly than ever "how easy it is for women to fall into the trap of measuring their worth by the man they're with".

"My Old Manure"

If : our soil is very poor,
If you have sand or clay galore,
If your yard is a bore,
You need my old manure.
If you are rich or poor,
If you are rick or poor,
You can afford for sure,
My aged, old, black manure.
It does not smell at all, 't all,
It will not burn anything at all,
In fact your plants will have a ball,
With the grandest manure of them all.
It will keep your plants warm
this winter,
this old manure that I deliver.
It is, in your plants, a fancy dinner, without it they may moon and silver.
If you want your yard to be revivin', and you'd like to put your plants
in heaven,
you would have to call me after seven.

Virginia Beach Newsweek in Review

The following is a list of some of the major news stories affecting Virginia Beach during the last week.

Del. Owen Pickett

Pickett intends to run for 2nd District seat

Del. Owen B. Pickett, D-Virginia Beach, announced his candidacy for the congressional seat being vacated by Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-2nd District.

If he wins the Democratic nomination, which no one else is formally seeking, Pickett, 55, will face in November one of the Beach's most formidable Republicans, State Sen. A. Joseph Canada, Jr.

Pickett has been a member of the House of Delegates since 1972. He is a former chairman of the Virginia Democratic Party and is identified with the party's moderate-conservative wing.

Question is who is supporting whom

When State Sen. A. Joseph Canada Jr., R-Virginia Beach, announced his plans to run for the 2nd District U. S. House of Representatives seat, he released a list of 27 prominent supporters.

When Del. Owen Pickett, D-Virginia Beach, entered the race, he also produced a list of backers -- 208 of them.

Five names were on both lists. They are Robert H. DeFord Jr., Thomas C. Kyrus, William R. Malbon, James R. McKenry and Bruce L. Thompson, all of Virginia Beach.

A Pickett strategist says the five are part of a growing group of Canada defectors.

Pickett adviser Kenneth V. Gerroe, a Virginia Beach lawyer, said many people only appeared on Canada's list because they mistakenly believed that Pickett would not run. He said he expected others to announce their support for Pickett in the future.

Canada said he expected something like this to happen, but he has picked up a lot more support. He plans in about two weeks to release a second list of supporters.

DeFord, Kyrus and McKenry all said their support of Canada had been based on their belief that Pickett would not run. They intend to support Pickett.

Thompson said he may join the many people who are going to give support to both sides.

Malbon said he is undecided about which candidate to support now.

Overman vows to make good on promises

Bill R. Overman was sworn in as sheriff last week. He vowed to make good on campaign promises to eliminate deadwood in the department.

There will definitely be changes in the top echelon of command, Overman said. He added that competent people in the department have nothing to fear.

Overman said he plans to institute said comprehensive training designed to increase deputies' roles as law enforcement agents.

Other planned changes include a pre-employment screening, aimed at hiring more qualified applicants. There will also be a career development program designed for employee retention.

The new sheriff conceded that change may come slowly. Among the obstacles he has to hurdle is the fact that he will be working under former Sheriff S. Joseph Smith's budget until mid-year.

In his first budget, Overman said he plans to ask for more men, positions and more equipment.

Residents present list to legislators

New laws should be passed giving local citizens the power to adopt ordinances, recall elected officials as well as elect their mayor and school board members, Virginia Beach residents told city legislators last week.

The requests were made at a public hearing held annually by the city's six representatives to legislature before the opening of the General Assembly session. This year's meeting attracted nearly 20 people, five of whom rose to speak.

The speakers also called for new legislation requiring changes in road financing methods, accountability among elected officials and a sand replenishment program for Sandbridge beaches.

Hearing the legislative requests were State Sen. A. Joseph Canada and Delegates Robert Taia and Harry R. "Bob" Purkey, all Republicans. Also on hand were Delegates Glenn B. McClanahan, Owen B. Pickett and J. W. "Billy" O'Brien, all Democrats.

Water fee

and those neighborhoods which have met the 75 percent petition requirements. The staff then will provide a recommendation for an appropriate method for addressing these conditions at a future City Council meeting.

Most of the speakers among the well-users decided to delay their remarks until council came up with amendments to address their concerns.

In many instances the well-users have requested city water with no success. They feel they are being unjustly treated because they would have escaped the fees if they had been provided water when they requested it.

In the meantime, they have had to spend money on wells to provide their own water source.

While the ordinance has been considered generally to establish an impact fee for new construction, it actually addresses new water connections, which would include existing properties still on well water.

Residents also complained that they would not have known how they would be affected by the ordinance except for a Sunday newspaper article.

Councilwoman Barbara Hentley, who was asked by Heischouer to speak on council's position on the well-users, said that it was not the intention of Council to conceal the impact on well-users, but that the emphasis has been on new construction rather than new connections.

Before opening the floor to the public, she said that the city has proposals on how the issue would be addressed, but that ordinances were not available yet. She said council has been aware of the problem and that she made a reference to it during an open session in October.

She questioned the accuracy of the newspaper article which stated the problem was not discussed at a meeting.

Hentley said that she shared the concerns of the well-users because, "I'm on a well, too."

Property owners under the ordinance will be required to pay a resource recovery fee based on the number of drainage fixtures. The fee for an average single-family house containing two baths and modern appliances would have 24 drainage fixture units at $95 each would be approximately $2280. The fees were recommended by Arthur Young and Company, city consultants, in a financial study.

The fees would provide 51 percent of the cost of the $176.1 million Lake Gaston project with the rest coming from increased water rates.

Following the Dec. 16 meeting builders bombarded the city for building permits hoping that the city would lift the retroactive feature of the ordinance, which council did.

This means that the fee will not be imposed on the projects for which the permits were issued.

Richard Guy, attorney representing the Tidewater Builder's Association, made it clear that the builders would expect the same treatment accorded well-users. He said that an element of unfairness is involved in trying to find ways to help the well-users.

At issue, he said, is a serious question of fairness and equity.

"I wonder how these people on wells differ from me who have been paying taxes all these years," Guy said. "If the well-users were given a longer time to pay, others will want a longer time to pay, if exemptions are given in any way, two classes would result."

Councilman Robert G. Jones, who voted against the ordinance, did so, he said, because he thought the well-users' position should be considered along with the ordinance. He also had reservations about provisions which would raise questions of equal protection.

Jones, who is a lawyer, said that the law would require the parties to be treated equitably. He suggested a one-month moratorium, until Feb. 14, to allow the neighbors now using wells to reach the 75 percent agreement needed to bring city water to their communities.

Developers would enjoy the same status thereby avoiding question of equity. He said he supported the recovery fee, but would have difficulty adopting the ordinance without the brief moratorium.

He said that he wanted consideration of the provisions tentatively proposed by the city manager in relation to well-users along with the consideration of the ordinance.

Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr., who also voted against approval of the ordinance, has been opposed to the recovery fee and has suggested a real estate transfer fee instead.

The Tidewater Builder's Association also has opposed the recovery fee and has proposed a transfer fee or a real estate tax increase to spread the cost over all the citizens.

The water system, however, has been set up to be self-supporting with users paying for the service.

The city's water ordinance makes connection to the city's water system mandatory shortly after the system is available in a neighborhood.

Until changes are made in the ordinance, City Attorney Dale Bimson said, the ordinance would apply to new construction and properties now served by wells.

Jones said that the city would have to make any changes apply to new construction as well as to the well owners.

"Maybe," replied Mayor Heischouer, implying that this may not be the case.

Although most of the speakers who had signed up to speak on the ordinance, decided to wait for further developments, others did make statements.

Not the stereotype

There is much more to being a butler administrator than the old stereotype of "Jeeves the Butler," according to Garfield.

The "administrator" in the title denotes the fact that they run the household, she said. They are responsible for the entire staff, which can be as many as 20 employees.

The butler administrator handles all scheduling and paying of the household bills. In many households now, the butler administrator has a computer in his or her office to help in personnel, billing and inventory matters.

"In many cases it is still a situation where 'Madame' doesn't know where the kitchen is and 'Sir' is too busy making more money to be bothered. It is left up to us to keep the household running smoothly," she explained.

Garfield says that butler administrators are trained to give outstanding service. This means anticipating what will need to be done, such as preparing a guest room, and seeing that it is done before they are asked to do it.

In the case of setting up a guest room, there is more to be done than just putting fresh linens on the bed. The guest must be made comfortable. Nieces, like expensive chocolates, mineral water and liquors, should be on hand.

"If we are seeing to a dinner party for 300 people and one of the guests says 'I'm a vegetarian' we aren't supposed to panic," Garfield explained. "A well prepared butler can offer the guest an omelet or perhaps fish, which the chief can quickly prepare."

While the role of the butler administrator has expanded from the days of old, Garfield says they are still trained to provide traditional services.

Their education at Spencer's school included learning how to select fine clothing and handmade shoes as well as making plane and hotel reservations. They were also instructed on the proper manner in which to set up and stock a wine cellar.

How does Garfield plan to use her skills here in Virginia Beach?

Beach Bound Garfield said she is not looking for a long-term position until after June of this year, when her husband retires from the Navy. Garfield hopes to remain in Virginia Beach. She admits they must go wherever her husband finds a civilian job.

In the meantime, she would like to find a position with a business firm working in the board room perhaps. Or with a hotel that provides private butler service for its top floor guests.

"Many businessmen don't like to be seen in the large public dining rooms at hotels," Garfield said. "Mainly because they don't want their competition to know with whom they are meeting. For them, a butler to plan private dinners and events is ideal."

Newly promoted firefighters are congratulated by Fire Chief Harry E. Diezel.

David Wills wins Harry Pickett Award

David Wills of Virginia Beach, has won the annual Harry Pickett Award as sales person of the year for The Hickory Printing Group, Inc., Hickory, N.C.

Wills' sales were close to $2 million.

Business

The criteria for this award does not entirely rely on sales dollars. The profitability of those dollars, attitude, the sales person's relationship with peers, with sales service people, production and plant workers and management are important.

Before joining The Hickory Printing Group in February, 1978, Mr. Wills worked for his father, also a printer.

"I try to treat my clients as I would like to be treated myself, to respond to their needs," Wills said. "I believe in working hard, and I have some very good people working with me who have a similar philosophy."

New job forecasts 47 percent higher for '86

A total of 19,439 new jobs are expected as a result of manufacturing and basic non-manufacturing announcements made in 1985. This activity includes both announced new facilities and expansions of existing facilities known to the Virginia Department of Economic Development.

Manufacturing announcements made in the Commonwealth this year totaled 143 with 8,909 expected jobs. Four of these announcements were new plants in Virginia Beach.

These include Cassco Ice & Cold Storage Co., Ecotac, GUL USA Inc. and Sorbille. There were expansions of existing firms in Virginia Beach, including Capital Foundry of Virginia, Lite Desserts, Inc. and Tidewater Cook, Inc.

The nonmanufacturing segment contributed significantly to the Virginia economy this year. A record 10,530 new jobs were reported this year as a result of major basic non-manufacturing announcements with investments exceeding $168 million.

In 1984, 4,200 new jobs and $85 million in investments were announced.

This activity included operations such as wholesalers, distributors, corporate headquarters, administrative offices, research and development, business services, and other industries considered basic employers.

Nineteen of the 20 manufacturing Standard Industrial Classifications reported new and/or expanding industry this year. The groupings with the greatest expected employment growth were: SIC 35 - Nonelectrical machinery, 1,387; SIC 20 - Food and kindred products, 1,088; SIC 37 - Transportation equipment, 1,058; and SIC 36 - Electrical and electronic machinery, equipment, and supplies, 980.

Twenty-seven firms, including GUL USA Inc., announced plans to employ 100 or more people. Thirteen were new firms and 14 were expansions.

Thirty-four companies announced investments of $2 million or more; 11 were new facilities and 23 were expansions of existing firms. Seven firms announced investments of $16 million or more.

Manufacturing announcements this year represented over $453 million in investments for Virginia. New plants accounted for 57 percent of the total and expansions, 43 percent.

Seven new foreign-related companies were among the firms announced this year. Among them is GUL USA Inc., a subsidiary of GUL Weitsults of Cornwall England.

In addition to the manufacturing announcements discussed so far, Virginia experienced considerable non-manufacturing activity in 1985. Virginia will be the location of a new $25 million long distance telecommunications network for SouthernTel of Virginia.

Virginia also is the location of the new state-of-the-art Software Productivity Consortium (SPC) that will create 175-200 jobs. Nonmanufacturing activity this year represented approximately 10,350 jobs and over $168 million in investments.

This report is compiled from information received from various State agencies, including the Department of Economic Development, public utilities, railroads, and private development groups. All information is obtained on a voluntary basis and no claim is made that the lists are complete. This report is based on announcements of planned manufacturing and non-manufacturing capital expenditures; however, in some instances at the time of publication, some of these industries may be in operation.

MPA program to aid insurance buyers

James M. Thomson, Commissioner of Insurance, has announced the implementation of the Virginia Market Assistance Plan. The MPA program is a voluntary arrangement created to respond to a perceived need to assist commercial insurance buyers in Virginia Beach and elsewhere in obtaining difficult to place commercial lines liability insurance.

The Plan will help in the placement of municipal liability insurance (excluding pollution coverage), insurance for day care providers, liquor liability insurance, and products liability for businesses with annual sales of three million dollars or less.

The Plan will not apply to areas where an assigned risk plan or other residual mechanism already exists, such as property insurance, automobile insurance and workers compensation.

Virginia Beach firms seeking coverage in the designated areas, should, through their agent, contact the Virginia Market Assistance Plan, c/o The Independent Insurance Agents of Virginia, 8600

Mayland Drive, Richmond, Virginia 23229, 747-9300.

Each application to the Plan must be executed by a licensed Virginia agent and be accompanied by a non-refundable application fee of $100.

A Producer's Committee will try to place the risk in question. If unable to secure coverage, they will forward the application to the Underwriting Committee for consideration.

The Underwriting Committee is comprised of insurance companies who have agreed to participate in this Plan, and who will try to find a way to write risks presented to the Plan.

Commissioner Thomson emphasized that this Plan is designed to help those who have been unable to find coverage and is not designed to help someone who already has coverage to find a lower premium.

One of the Plan requirements is that a risk seeking coverage must have been declined by three insurance companies prior to submission to the Plan.

The Plan will operate as long as its services are deemed necessary by the Bureau of Insurance.

Checkered Flag first with Hino trucks

Hino Motors, Ltd., the world's second largest medium and heavy diesel truck manufacturer, has named Checkered Flag Motor Car Company its first franchisee in Virginia.

The franchise was officially awarded in December during ceremonies at Checkered Flag's Toyota dealership in Virginia Beach by Toshiaki Amano, president of Hino Diesel Truck, North America. Edward B. Snyder, Checkered Flag president, was on hand to sign the franchise agreement.

Checkered Flag is the 56th dealership to be named to the Hino Diesel Truck USA network, which is projected to total 165 dealers nationwide by 1987.

Hino will eventually name two other Virginia franchisees, one in Richmond and the other in Northern Virginia.

The Hino line will be sold and serviced at Checkered Flag's Norfolk location at 5636 E. Virginia Beach Blvd. According to Stephen M. Snyder, a vice president with Checkered Flag, the firm's service technicians have been specially trained by Hino master technicians to provide top-quality maintenance for both individual and fleet Hino truck owners.

The Checkered Flag Hino store carries the full line of Hino's medium and heavy duty trucks, priced from $20,000 to $34,000.

"These are outstanding multipurpose trucks. The Japanese call them reliable workhorse machines of the road, and it's a fitting description," said Edward B. Snyder. "These trucks have been very well received in this country and we expect sales in Hampton Roads to be as brisk as they've been elsewhere in the U.S."

Hino introduced its line of medium-duty commercial trucks to the U.S. market in 1984. The Japanese manufacturer ranks second to Mercedes-Benz as a world-wide producer of commercial diesel vehicles. Sales for 1985 are projected at $25 million, with a 40 percent increase per year in the next five years expected for the U.S. market.

New battalion chief Donna Brehm has earned her rank

By Beatrice Kitchen
 Standing a full 5'5" at a compact 114 pounds, Donna Pratt Brehm may not seem at first glance like a typical firefighter, let alone a battalion chief.

But once she starts talking about her profession, rest assured, she has earned the position step by step.

A lady who obviously knows what she's talking about, she is the country's first female battalion chief in a major fire fighting operation.

"We know of one other woman in this position," she is quick to point out, "in a small town in Indiana."
 A bit uncomfortable with the attention this promotion has brought, Brehm nevertheless feels that the interest created by this "first" in Virginia Beach is an "important step to making women aware that this is an open career field."

"Years ago, we just weren't brought up to consider the possibility of firefighting as a career," Brehm said. "It's still a novelty. I figure in the next ten years we'll see a change in that direction."

Her story is unique in another aspect. Her husband Skip is also a firefighter for the city, having earned his title as battalion chief a little over a year ago.

"We don't work together," Brehm stated. "We think it's important to keep our identities separate. During the past two years, for instance, we haven't run into each other on the job at all. And we don't expect things to change. Our shifts and locations will still be different."

She will be stationed at the Training Center on Birdneck Road and has mixed feelings about leaving her "buddies" at Company 2.

"I'll miss 'em," she said a little wistfully. "This was my proving ground. I'll miss the camaraderie."

She glances through the glass window at her colleagues, fellow firefighters all, then the quick smile returns, "but I'm really looking forward to the challenge of the administrative side, even though it means leaving field work."

Brehm's interest in firefighting began 10 years ago when, as a newlywed, she simply wanted to spend more time with her husband.

Skip was in the Navy and volunteered as a firefighter for the city when he was off duty. She soon volunteered and found out she liked the challenge, both mentally and physically. A couple years later found them both working for the city as firefighters.

Educational and professional advancement followed for both as degrees were earned and promotions received.

She now holds a master's in public administration, earned with support from the city's employee tuition reimbursement program. Her company loyalty extends far beyond Company 2.

"The city has been good to me," she explained. "When Skip and I were first married, I worked in a bank at a very low salary. When I joined the fire department, my salary nearly doubled, plus the city helped me with my last year of undergraduate school, then reimbursed my master's. I've been able to take advantage of a lot of personal development opportunities that are offered and feel truly fortunate to be working here."

"Of her role as part of a firefighting couple, Brehm said, "The biggest problem is that we never have a whole day off together without someone having to go on duty. But on the other hand, we're always interested in each other's days. And we tend to motivate each other a lot."

She was asked if there was any problem having the men respond to her as an equal when she first came aboard.

"I was lucky because I had been a volunteer for two years prior to joining the city," she said. "Like any new person, it took time to join in with a new group. But I really can't say there was any difficulty because I was a woman."

And as far as the headaches with her new position?

"The biggest change will be the change of pace," Brehm noted. "I'll be going off shift work into a work week with normal daytime hours. And because of the position available and promotions and retirements up the line, I'll be filling an administrative slot at the training center and that means I'll be leaving firefighting. I'll miss it, the sense of belonging to a group. I'll be working instead with training, equipment, physical fitness and safety issues, kind of a hodgepodge."

Asked about future goals, Brehm responded, "The next step logically would be to district chief, but it'll be two years at least, before I would even be eligible to test for that."

Kitchen is a communication specialist with the City of Virginia Beach Public Information Office. She is the new editor of "Beam", the city's newsletter.

Arms control measures

 cruise missiles, submarine-launched weapons, and clandestine devices.

At best, this program might protect a few missile silos. At worst, it will provoke the Soviets into a massive escalation of nuclear arms designed to overwhelm or outflank American defenses. The arms race will be beyond control.

As a result, UCS has initiated a powerful and influential program to make sure that the science fiction fantasy of space weapons never becomes a terrifying reality. We have mobilized scientists and citizen activists in an effort that combines public education with effective lobbying.

A majority of the members of the National Academy of Sciences—our nation's most prestigious scientific body—have joined UCS. They stated their opposition to the development, testing, and deployment of anti-satellite weapons and ballistic missile defense systems in space, such as the Star Wars scheme.

The appeal was sent to both President Reagan and Premier Gorbachev. Among those supporting the effort were 57 Nobel Laureates, more than half of the living American recipients of this prize in the sciences.

Six thousand members of the scientific community are participating in our Scientist Action Network, sharing their technological expertise with the public in national as well as local forums.

Eminent scientists are testifying under UCS sponsorship before Congressional committees, while others are helping to educate citizens on the threat of nuclear war and alternatives to the arms race.

These efforts by the scientific community are aided by letters and phone calls to members of Congress from thousands of UCS sponsors who have joined our Legislative Alert Network.

Such lobbying activity has helped to cut one billion dollars from the budget for development of space weapons, but Presidential arm-twisting has nevertheless resulted in far too large an expenditure for these programs.

Last July, as part of the UCS education effort, many of the leading members of the original Manhattan Project team met in Washington to mark the 40th anniversary of the detonation of the first atomic bomb at Trinity site in Alamogordo, New Mexico. They came together in hopes of finding new ways to achieve peace—rather than searching for new weapons of war.

The activities of these prominent scientists highlighted the risks associated with the ceaseless search for a technological solution to the nuclear arms race and demonstrated that arms control negotiations are a feasible and secure alternative.

Framework for security
 Finally, rather than simply opposing new weapons programs, UCS advocates a set of policies which we believe can achieve true national security, not the false security of Star Wars and a nuclear buildup.

This framework includes:
 •Negotiations to ban all weapons from space.
 •Negotiation of deep and meaningful cuts in superpower nuclear forces.

•Adoption of a policy of "No First Use" and withdrawal of nuclear weapons from front-line positions.

•Achieving a treaty to ban all nuclear weapons tests.
 •Development of a global program for curtailing the spread of nuclear weapons to additional countries.

To achieve these goals will require an effective, long-term campaign combining the best efforts of the scientific community with participation by a broad spectrum of American citizens.

The Union of Concerned Scientists is working hard to bring to bear on special resources—our knowledge of the science of weapons technology, our awareness of the devastating effects of nuclear war, and our reputation of responsibility among national leaders and members of the media—to help change the perilous course of our nation and our world.

The policies we advocate have been endorsed by many leading scientists and military experts, individuals who do not often take public stands, who share our views on the issues and believe that we have a special importance.

We also need your help if our efforts are to succeed. You can talk to your relatives, your friends, and members of your community, helping to make them aware of the nuclear threat and of the fact that workable, non-military solutions are available.

More than bullets

the sheriff's department and even FBI agents.

The range is divided into two sides.

The one side is a fairly typical range with sections for rifle and pistol practice. There are also some innovative features.

The range has metal target rather than paper targets. The advantage is that they simulate real life situations more closely. When hit the targets will fall, though it may take more than one shot to down them, as can happen in an actual situation.

There are also a series of doors set up. The officers can use them to practice coming through a door and then shooting.

There are two main features in the second part of the range.

Trees at the back of the range are ideal for sniper practice.

While the department still uses the traditional "Shoot/Don't Shoot" films to train the officers, it also has a simulated course set up for the same purpose.

"The shoot/don't shoot range is important in the officers' training," Wall said. "Studies show that most confrontations occur at close range and in poor lighting."

On the shoot/don't shoot course, officers run along an alley way. At the first turn there are a series of store fronts. Posters pop up at the windows of the store fronts and officers must make a split second decision on whether or not to shoot. One time the poster may be a gunman, another time it could be a woman with a child or a news cameraman.

There is also an indoor section of the course. The officers come down a dark hallway, make a quick turn and are met by either friend or foe.

Another innovation in the department has been to decentralize some of the detectives, Wall said. They are now handling property crimes out of the various precincts. Uniformed officers, however, handle as many as one half of the investigations, freeing the detectives to concentrate on more serious cases.

Mounted Patrol

A fairly recent addition to the department is the Mounted Patrol Unit. It consists of six officers and a lieutenant.

"A mounted patrol has a number of advantages," Wall said. "They are a highly visible unit and can cover 10 times the area of a foot beat. They are also popular with the public."

During the summer months the mounted patrol is stationed at the Beach and tourist areas. For the holiday season, they have a special job. The patrol is assigned to the various mall parking areas to help in reducing crime. From now until the start of the summer season, the patrol is placed in high crime areas.

More felony arrests are made per officer by mounted patrols than foot beats, the chief said.

"One of my mounted officers has five drunk driving arrests," Wall said proudly. "Two of them even involved pursuits."

The mounted patrol is also present at major events like parades. Their presence is for more than just show. They are used in crowd control.

Volunteers

The department also has a number of volunteers.

There is an auxiliary police force with 60 members. These volunteer officers give a minimum of 20 hours per month to the Police Department.

There are over 100 other volunteers working in various aspects of the department. Wall sees this type of community involvement in the police department as the wave of the future.

"The relationship between the officers and the volunteers is of great value," he said. "Ordinarily officers only see citizens that are victims or who are being arrested. These volunteers are indicative of the general population. This relationship also helps the volunteers to see police in a different light. Perhaps this will help to improve the image of the police."

Items discussed in closed session

Prior to the regular Council meeting, Council met for three hours in executive session. Among the subjects discussed were appointments to boards and commissions and the new water resource recovery fee ordinance.

Following the formal session, Council again went into executive session for a performance evaluation of Council appointees and for a discussion of an eight-foot bike path along little Neck Road to which some residents have objected.

Residents feel that the eight-foot bike path is acceptable along a small portion of the road which is only 18 feet wide, but is not needed on the rest of the road which is 30-foot wide and serves a residential community.

Residents are especially concerned about the removal of the trees.

Council waives rezoning condition

By a vote of 8-3, Council waived a condition imposed on a rezoning application on March 17, 1980 which required a 100-foot buffer along the western side of property at 943 First Colonial Road. The trees were to remain in the buffer strip.

The request was made by the Virginia Beach Federal Savings and Loan which is selling the property to ZYA Associates.

The property was rezoned from R-4 To Residential District to O-1 Office District.

The applicant maintained that the condition was not required of other properties in the area.

Dissenting from the waiver action were Vice Mayor Reba McClanan, and Councilmembers Meyer Oberndorf and Barbara Henley.

Tax exemption code revised

Senior citizens and disabled persons receiving tax exemptions are given some leeway for late filing under an ordinance adopted by City Council.

The City Code sets the cut-off date for applying for relief at June 30. Occasionally, applications are received after the cut-off date and the denial of the relief causes hardship for applicants.

The new provision authorizes the granting of late applications for tax exemption, deferral or freeze in cases where the applicant is a first-time applicant, or where the failure to grant the relief requested would result in a hardship to the applicant.

The city manager would be permitted to accept and process late applications between July 1 and Jan. 31 of the tax year.

Marcel recognized in resolution

Sally A. Marcel, assistant registrar who died on Nov. 24 is recognized in a resolution adopted by City Council.

Marcel served for 12 years at the Pembroke-Aragona Pharmacy, registering more than 10,000 voters.

David Marcel, her husband, accepted the resolution.

Funds awarded for Owls Creek boat ramp

The Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries has awarded the city $150,000 for the construction of improvements to the Owls Creek Boat Ramp. No city funds are required.

Removal planned for Potters Sand Fence

The city will try once more to remove the Potters Sand Fence. Council awarded a contract for the removal to Hydro Corporation for $148,884, the low bid of four under a "no-cure-no-pay" contract.

The fence erected as a device to keep the beach from eroding, proved unsuccessful and has become a safety hazard to swimmers and boaters along the oceanfront from 17th Street to 20th Street.

Since 1979 several contracts have been authorized for removal of the fence without success.

Last May, only two firms submitted bids on the removal project and both were considered high.

Council meeting rescheduled

Dare led to career as playwright

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

For Deborah Pryor, being a playwright was not a lifelong ambition, but just something that happened.

"Becoming a playwright wasn't really a conscious decision," the Virginia Beach resident said. "I enjoyed writing short stories and poems when I was growing up. I did have an interest in theater. As kind of a dare to myself I took a class in college (William & Mary) in writing plays taught by Dr. Louis Catron. Things just happened from there."

A requirement for the class, Pryor, 29, said, was to write a one-act play. At the end of the term Catron chose four of the plays written by students to be performed at the campus theater workshop. One of those chosen was Pryor's.

It was through Catron's encouragement that Pryor eventually pursued a playwrighting career. After graduating from William & Mary she went on to receive a master's in Fine Arts in Playwriting from the University of Iowa.

"My career as a playwright has just evolved," Pryor explained.

"The theater business is like that. You stand on a threshold and see a door open, then there are other doors; but there are no guarantees. One day you realize you are no longer a college student but a professional and a company is putting on one of your plays."

One of Pryor's plays, "Wetter than Water" is currently being performed in Norfolk by the Virginia Stage Company.

The performance marks the opening of a new concept at the theater. The "Second Stage" is meant to be a place where several stages of play development can effectively and comfortably take place.

"It is really a new concept for all of us involved," Pryor said. "The whole five weeks (two weeks of rehearsal and three weeks of performance) is like a continuing rehearsal process, during

In keeping with its continuing effort to improve crime fight capabilities, the Virginia Beach Police Department is planning a number of new law enforcement programs, according to the Chief of Police Charles R. Wall.

Barrett leaving city for position in private sector

Virginia Beach City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck has announced the resignation of Michael J. Barrett, assistant to the city manager for resort affairs.

Barrett has been employed with the City since 1980 and has served as the executive director of the Resort Area Advisory Commission since Jan. 1, 1985.

Barrett is leaving city employment to become the chief executive officer of the Runnymede Corporation on Feb. 3.

Muehlenbeck expressed his high regard for Barrett as a public manager and indicated that his professional skills and dedication would be missed.

One program that Wall is very excited about is the Enhance 911 system. This system will provide dispatchers with more information than the current 911 system.

Under the enhance 911 system, when a call comes in to the dispatcher the location of caller will appear on computer display terminal, Wall said.

"This will make such a difference," he said. "There are times when a caller can't tell us his location. It could be that the caller does not know his location or he could pass out from pain or smoke inhalation."

"Under the current system it is very frustrating for the dispatchers when they know the caller needs help and they can't send it because the dispatcher doesn't have the location of the caller," Wall added.

There are other advantages to the enhance 911 system.

Many of the Virginia Beach residents who live on the Norfolk border get Norfolk services when they call 911. These calls then have to be transferred to Virginia Beach.

According to Wall the enhance system will be able to determine whether a call should go to Virginia Beach or Norfolk. This will save valuable time in an emergency situation.

City turning trash into heat, money

By Cheryl Martin

The City of Virginia Beach is working on a project with Virginia Natural Gas to extract the methane gas produced naturally at Virginia Beach's Landfill No. 2 on Centerville Turnpike.

VNG will purchase the methane gas from the city. It will be mixed with VNG pipeline volumes and distributed to customers. The recovery of methane gas from landfill waste is an emerging technology. The Virginia Beach project is expected to be the second largest such undertaking in the eastern United States, according to P. Lee Starkey, VNG public information manager. Methane is being recovered at the Fresh Kills Landfill in New York and at approximately eight other sites in the United States.

"We seldom have projects that are so totally beneficial to everyone involved," Virginia Beach Vice Mayor Reba McClanain said. "I'm really excited about the project."

McClanain said the city expects to receive between $150,000 and $200,000 in revenue from the project annually. These funds will most likely go into the city's general fund she said. Some of the money may also be directed by into related projects.

The city's Public Works department began in 1983 evaluating the recovery of methane formed at the landfill. In June of 1984, the City Council awarded the contract for the project to American Alternate. See TURNING, page 8

Bids open on Virginia Beach Boulevard widening

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The State Department of Highways and Transportation will open bids on Jan. 22 in Richmond on the first phase of the three-phase Virginia Beach Boulevard improvement project which has been in the city's Capital Improvement Plan since 1972.

Al Nash, the department's district engineer, told City Council at a recent workshop, that the total project, estimated to cost $50 million, should be completed by the mid 1990's. Specifications for the first phase, from Rosemont Road to Witchduck Road, calls for a Nov. 1, 1987 completion date.

Nash said that the construction contract, which should be awarded within 30 days of the Jan. 22 date, stipulates that two lanes will be open to traffic in both directions at all times.

Also the contractor is required to call a public hearing with property owners who will be affected by the construction. The public hearing, he said, will probably be scheduled within two weeks of the date the contract is let.

Each of the three phases are expected to cost approximately the same, $16 million. Although the actual construction cost for the first phase is greater, Nash said, the state already owns the required rights of way. The state has yet to acquire rights of way for the other two phases of the construction.

When completed Virginia Beach Boulevard will have an eight-lane facility from the Norfolk City Line to Farmington Road, with dual left turn lanes in at most intersections, phased traffic signalization and some right turn lanes. The feeder roads would be eliminated.

Jim Cleveland, second district engineer, said the contract included a bridge over Thalia Creek, starting first. Nash said it is the most complicated section and will probably be finished last.

Generally, Nash assured council that efforts will be made to keep traffic flowing but "we're not going to have any disturbances. Nash also said that the Department would work closely with adjoining property owners.

The road will be financed by the federal and state governments (95 percent) and the city government (5 percent).

The city's CIP contains an allocation of $1.5 million for the first phase and $896,150 for the second phase. The first phase is 3.3 miles and phase two from See BIDS, page 12

The battle goes on

Drunk driving has received a lot of publicity over the past years in Virginia Beach and elsewhere throughout the country. The holiday season has been an ideal time to remind people of the dangers of drinking and driving.

In fact many Beach residents may feel too much has been said on the subject and that it has reached overkill. Recent statistics of holiday highway fatalities speak differently.

Over the recent Christmas and New Year holidays the death toll in Virginia reached 21 people with only a couple of these deaths being directly attributed to alcohol consumption.

During the same period last year, 29 people were killed with at least seven deaths being attributed to alcohol consumption.

While eight may not appear to be a significant decrease, it still means that eight more lives are continuing than were after last holiday season.

The dangers of drinking and driving can never be repeated too many times. The campaign against driving under the influence of alcohol or other drugs must continue until the time when no deaths can be attributed to this killer.

Throughout the year, not just during the holiday season, Virginia Beach residents must remember the importance of having a designated driver when there will be drinking. By the same token, Beach residents who host parties and serve alcohol must make arrangements for the safe arrival home of all of their guests.

The fight against drinking and driving is a continuous battle all must wage. —C.M.

Understanding religious freedom

Thursday, Jan. 16 marks the 200th anniversary of the adoption of "A Statute For Religious Freedom." The bill, passed in 1786 by the Virginia General Assembly was the first in Western history to outlaw religious persecution.

The Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom was drafted in 1777 by Thomas Jefferson. At the time he wrote the bill, the idea of separation of church and state was difficult to accept for many Virginians.

Even Patrick Henry, who so eloquently denounced taxation without representation, supported another bill that would establish a general assessment for Christian worship. The tax would replace an earlier assessment that had been earmarked for support of the Anglican Church.

Largely through the efforts of James Madison the legislation was passed.

Five years later, in drafting the First Amendment of the Constitution the philosophy expressed in the Virginia statute became the law of the land.

In the statute, Jefferson expressed his feelings about corruption associated with an alliance of church and state. He wrote: "To compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves, is sinful and tyrannical...Our civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions, any more than our opinions in physics or geometry..."

For Jefferson the statute did more than just guarantee the freedom to choose a church. The statute was concerned with intellectual liberty.

In writing to Madison, Jefferson said, "It is honorable of us, to have produced the first legislature with the courage to declare, that the reasoner of man may be trusted with the formation of his own opinions."

Jefferson's wish for himself and his countrymen was freedom to pursue religion where ever intelligence and conscience led.

This is a very important concept to remember. In recent years much has been said about the freedom of religion and the separation of church and state. The moral majority and other religious groups argue that it is wrong not to have prayer in schools. They have objected to the lack of religious information in public schools regarding Christian holidays.

While on the surface their complaints may appear to have some validity, it is lost when the true concept of the right of religious freedom is remembered.

Americans tend to forget that religious freedom is not limited to the choice of which Christian denomination one chooses to associate. Rather, religious freedom is the right to adhere to any religious philosophy or to choose no religious affiliation.

Under the Constitution, Americans are afforded the right to worship the God of their choice, be he the Christian, Jewish or Moslem God or even Satan. They may also choose to worship trees or money or any deity they wish.

The 200th anniversary of "A Statute For Religious Freedom" is an ideal time to stop and regrass the true meaning of the legislation. —C.M.

Great Neck archeological site needs to be rescued

By Howard A. MacCord Sr.

One of the prices we pay for progress, prosperity, comfort and convenience is the damage or destruction of archeological sites, both historic and prehistoric. We lose hundreds of such sites every year in Virginia. Such losses are inevitable, and I doubt if most citizens would vote to save a majority of sites, if doing so would block progress or interfere with our comfort or prosperity.

Commentary

On the other hand, historians and archeologists generally see the loss of sites as the destruction of evidence needed in the research they do on behalf of the public. They know how incomplete and fragile the record of the past is, and they hate to see any site lost without having a chance to see, evaluate and (in important cases) study it.

How to reconcile the needs for progress with needs to study important archeological sites is a problem our society has not yet solved to everyone's satisfaction. The major stumbling block is the cost of such studies, and who pays?

If a site is lost due to a federally-funded or licensed project, federal laws require historical and archeological studies to be done (and paid for) as part of the project. This places the archeological remains in a category with timber, non-historic structures, groundwater, bedrock, or other items which must be moved or coped with as part of the project.

However, federal laws apply only to about 10 percent of the many earth-disturbing projects done annually in the Commonwealth.

For the other 90 percent, no provision is made for the needed studies. In some instances, a civic-minded landowner or developer will pay (or help pay) for archeological studies. Such efforts often provide favorable publicity for and attract attention to the project or development.

In rare instances, a developer preserves a historic site as a permanent attraction. Good examples of this are the study and subsequent protection of colonial house sites at Kingsmill near Williamsburg, and the preservation and interpretation of a canal lock in Richmond as part of a project done for Reynolds Metals Company.

Who should pay, though, for historical archeological studies done on other sites?

It does not seem fair to expect or require the land-owner to pay, since in many cases, the historic site has no economic value to the owner. Actually, historic and prehistoric sites and data belong to the whole public, although through accidents of history, sites happen to be on land owned by individuals or corporations.

Since study of a site is beneficial to the public, and the data become public property, such studies are truly "Public Business". As such, it seems only fair that public funds be used for such work.

Funding can be from one source alone, or it can be a mix of local, regional, state, and federal appropriations, supplemented in any case, by contributions of money, supplies, equipment time, and labor from a variety of non-governmental sources. Using a mix of such resources in rescuing data from a site results in maximum data-yield at least cost, which is the desired result.

Many sites have been studied in this manner in the past, and the method holds the greatest promise for low-cost results on future projects.

Great Neck Site

Given this background and philosophy, let us address the need for rescue work at a major archeological site at Great Neck, at the north end of Pungo Ridge, between Broad Bay and Lynnhaven Inlet. This area contained what was without doubt the most important Indian site in all of Tidewater Virginia.

Because of the location, the good soil, and the diverse food sources available, the site has been (and is) a highly-desirable place to live.

Indians lived on the site off and on for about 10,000 years, and at least one major fortified town was there during late prehistoric times.

In 1585, the village of Chesepic, visited by explorer Ralph Lane of the Roanoke Island colony, was at Great Neck, and shows on John White's map of the region. Two other sites shown on the map are Inlet, and Skicoac, located on the eastern branch of Elizabeth River in Norfolk. None of the three sites has yet been identified with certainty.

Since the Chesepic (also Chesopean and Chesapeake) Indians were friendly, the land better than that on Roanoke Island, and the deepwater port (Hampton Roads) far superior to Albemarle Sound, the 1587 colony intended originally to settle at or near Cape Henry.

Instead, they were landed at Roanoke Island, from which place they planned to move north as soon as they could. While the Lost Colony is still "lost", it appears that they did actually move north and live with or near the Chesapeake Indians for many years. They were later killed by Chief Powhatan, shortly before the arrival of the Jamestown colony in May, 1607.

Evidence to prove or disprove the fate of the Lost Colony is waiting to be found in archeological sites representing the late prehistoric Indians of the Chesapeake Tribe and their neighbors. The proof has not yet been found, because almost no archeological work has been done in the area.

Still worse, no deliberate program to seek the evidence is planned for the area.

In contrast, the North Carolina Four Hundredth Anniversary Committee, working with East Carolina University, is making a deliberate search of archeological sites in eastern North Carolina for evidence of contact between the Lost Colony people and the local Indians.

A similar search should be made in Virginia.

Over the years, Floyd Painter of Norfolk has, in his spare time, been studying the Indian sites in the area, including a limited amount of digging. Around 1956, he was able to salvage materials and data from a mixed Indian and White site where Baylake Pines subdivision is now built.

The items he found date from early in the 17th century, which indicate an early settler's homestead, built on what had been an Indian habitation site, possibly Apasus.

Digging at Great Neck

Since 1978, Painter has been digging part of the Great Neck Site (also known as the Riding Ring Site and as Virginia Beach site No. 7). He has found several graves, storage pits, quantities of broken pottery, animal bones and shells, and stone tools and waste. Painter has published reports on his 1956 work and on part of his more-recent work.

In 1981-82, Dr. E. R. Turner, III of the Virginia Research Center for Archeology (VRCA) dug part of one building lot at Great Neck at the request of the lot owner, who was building a home there.

Turner found graves, storage pits, parts of a village palisade, and parts of two Indian longhouses or cabins, like those illustrated by John White and Captain John Smith. A report on Turner's work is not yet written or published.

In 1984, a fringe area of the Great Neck Site was uncovered in the right-of-way for Highway 279 (Great Neck Road) by archeologists from James Madison

Robots are coming to the beach

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

Robots are coming to Virginia Beach!

Unlike the Transformers and other robotic creatures that invaded Virginia Beach homes at Christmas time, these robots are not for child's play. Their specialty is trash collection. Yes, exciting things will be happening in the way of trash collection in the city beginning in March.

A new, automated trash collection system will begin in March at 16,000 homes in some sections of the Green Run, Kempsville, Pembroke, and Great Neck areas of the city.

With the new system, one employee drives the truck to the front of a home and pulls a lever that triggers a robot arm. The arm will grab the can, hoist it into the air and dump the contents inside the truck. The robot arm will then put the can back on the street.

I wonder if robot trash collecting arms are any quieter than human trashmen. Imagine an end to the banging and slamming of garbage cans at 6 a.m.

Could they possibly be neater? What an innovation. No more dented, squashed cans or piles of spilled garbage to contend with at the end of trash day.

Only time will tell if these robot trash collectors have been programmed with all this innovation. Even if they are noisy and messy they don't eat as much or need holidays like human garbage men.

All in all I find the whole concept fascinating. I hope I can keep my curiosity under control until March, when I see these creatures in action. Not thrilled by robots? Perhaps a new-trash can compliments of the city will excite you.

Yes, the city will provide homeowners on the robot routes with special garbage cans.

Now these are no ordinary garbage cans, mind you. They are 90-gallon cans. This means they will hold as much trash as three ordinary garbage cans.

These large cans will hold items such as shrub trimmings and discarded Christmas trees, along with large boxes and all of the family's garbage. Imagine, everything neatly placed in one can. I'll bet they will foil most dogs too.

You look perplexed? Oh! You are wondering how on earth you are going to carry such a large can to the curb each week. No problem. This time the city has thought of everything.

These amazing cans come equipped with wheels!

If you have a very large family and fear that even a 90-gallon can will not be able to handle a week's refuse there is still hope. Additional cans may be purchased at True Value Home Centers.

Now with the amazing trash cans the city will discourage residents from piling up other items along the curb. Bulky items, like refrigerators, sofas and tree trimmings will be picked up separately.

With all this automation I wonder if the city has a plan to help remind husbands to place garbage out front each week?

Maybe they could program the robot arm to snatch absent-minded husbands out of bed on trash day. This treatment would quickly cure the problem.

Oh, the beauty of this system is almost endless.

Can you believe all this automation is actually going to save the city money. That's right. The city expects to save $3.1 million over the next six years.

Six years is the time it will take to phase the program in throughout the entire city.

Now that's what I call phenomenal—progress combined with financial savings. On top of all this, those of you who dislike progress because it takes jobs away from

LET'S TALK

By Gary Blumenstein, president, Virginia Beach Education Association

Teachers working to see dreams come true fruition of another dream. The dream of space flight has nourished the national imagination since the early 1960's when President John F. Kennedy challenged Americans on the moon by the end of the decade. The goal was accomplished and our space program has continued to achieve new heights.

While throughout these last years space flight has been reserved for those few with specialized training, all that will change this month with the voyage of the space shuttle Challenger. On board will be the first "private citizen" to fly in space, Christa McAuliffe, a wife, mother of two and a history teacher from Concord, New Hampshire.

Chosen from 10 finalists out of a field of more than 11,000 teacher applicants, McAuliffe said in a recent interview, "I want to open the door. The fact that just an ordinary person is able to fly says a lot about our future."

She plans to share her experience with thousands of American students when she conducts two lessons to be televised live from the space shuttle.

The first lesson is entitled, "The Ultimate Field Trip" and will include a tour of the shuttle and a discussion of the astronauts' jobs.

The second lesson will deal with the reasons for and benefits of space exploration and will be called "Where We've Been, Where We're Going, Why?"

The lessons will be transmitted to classrooms through the Public Broadcasting Service (locally WJRO-TV).

The other finalists in the teacher in space competition are available to speak to classes or groups about the space program. Teachers can request such a presentation by writing the Education Services Office at the Langley Research Center, Hampton, VA 23665.

McAuliffe's journey will truly be an exciting adventure. Space travel and space living will be a part of our children's future.

Already NASA has announced plans for the construction of a space station in the early 1990's.

This mission of the Challenger will help all citizens to see that the future is now. We wish McAuliffe "Godspeed!"

Virginia Beach Newsweek in Review

The following is a list of some of the major news stories affecting Virginia Beach during the last week.

Beach condemnation and restoration urged

The Ocean Park Civic League asked the City Council to condemn and restore almost a mile of severely eroded Chesapeake Bay beach, whose ownership has been in question for more than 50 years.

The city and the new Ocean Park Corp. are waging a battle in Norfolk Circuit Court over the beach, which is immediately west of Lynnhaven Inlet.

The residents said in a letter to Mayor Harold Hesichober that while litigation has been going on the beach has been eroding and the rights of the public destroyed.

At high tide, about half an acre of the disputed beach property is under water.

The residents have charged that the dredging of the Lynnhaven Inlet by the Army Corps of Engineers has hastened the demise of the beach.

Among the questions to be settled in the 19-year-old Ocean Park court case are: Is the beach public or private? If it is private who owns it?

Land dealer Edwin B. Lindley Jr. claims he owns the beach front.

The Ocean Park residents say that the city may condemn the beach without weakening its claim of public ownership.

Catholic center hoping for June opening

The Catholic Family and Children's Services is hoping for a June opening of its new 5,000 square-foot building on Princess Anne Road.

"This new office means a wider range of services will be available to the families of Virginia Beach," Elizabeth C. Crowling, executive director, said.

The new office will be behind the Kempsville Masonic Lodge and near the Church of the Ascension at 4844 Princess Anne Rd. The office is presently at 5347 Virginia Beach Blvd.

The non profit organization each year serves thousands of people.

McCoy intends to run for fourth council term

J. Henry McCoy Jr. announced he will run for a fourth term on the City Council.

McCoy, a 52-year-old dentist, represents the Kempville Borough. No challengers have yet declared for his seat.

McCoy said he feels he has gained a lot of experience over the past 12 years on council. In his next term he hopes to address what he calls the three major problems facing the city—water, schools and roads.

McCoy was first elected in 1974 to the council, defeating incumbent Garland Isdell. He was unopposed for re-election in 1978, and won a plurality of votes in a 1982 six-way race.

In addition to McCoy's seat, others up for election this year are the at-large seats now held by Nancy A. Creech and Robert G. Jones, Pungo Borough held by Barbara M. Henley and Bayside Borough held by Louis Jones.

Fletcher elected School Board chairman

James N. Fletcher, a department store manager, was elected chairman of the Virginia Beach School Board.

After his unanimous election by the board, Fletcher pledged to push for better communications between the board and City Council.

He takes the leadership role formerly held by Roy A.

Woods, who was not reappointed to the board. Vice Chairman Robert H. Callis Jr. will remain in the same post at least until July, when the board annually elects officers.

Fletcher took over the chairman's gavel at a board workshop that also featured the swearing of two new members, Floyd E. Taylor and Ulysses V. Spiva.

Spence named Neptune chairman

Melvin M. Spence, a Virginia Beach architect, has been named the chairman of the 1986 Neptune Festival by the Neptune Festival Board of Directors.

Spence, who succeeds Douglas Talbot, served last year as vice chairman and has actively supported the festival for the past 10 years.

Books

Overcoming the anxiety of computers

"Computer literacy" always makes me feel like a blacksmith in the age of General Motors. It somehow suggests that I'm old-fashioned, not too bright, and approaching joblessness.

According to author John Shore this kind of anxiety is often unnecessary. Computer anxiety can be caused by a variety of factors ranging from the conviction that "I'm going to break it!" to jargon that sounds like it came from a bad spy thriller.

In his book, The Sacherforte Algorithm, Shore gives an example: "One of your processes branched to an illegal address, tried to execute Joe's code, and died after committing a fatal protection violation."

This, he says, "Encourages the anxious computer novice about as much as medical humor encourages the preoperative patient."

Poor instructions or documentation and callousness born of ignorance on the part of bosses complete the process of frightening the very people computers are supposed to help.

The Sacherforte Algorithm and Other Antidotes to Computer Anxiety is an informative and witty way to begin replacing these worries with understanding.

There are reasons to worry about computers but they are not necessarily the ones that fear the most people. Rather than fearing how foolish the computer will make us look, we need to wonder whether our data is really safe in today's complex software.

Shore explains clearly and simply how both software and hardware work.

He uses the example of his Aunt Mart's recipe for sacherforte to show how a computer follows instructions. Readers without any background can feel confident that they understand the basic principles involved.

This provides the necessary background so Shore can discuss the "software crisis"—the widespread existence of unreliable software.

The software crisis occurs as programs increase in size and complexity. Methods of building programs that worked on a small scale become traps when they are applied to large projects.

Shore sees programming as a literary activity as well as mathematics and architecture. Bringing these three disciplines together can control complexity. A comparison of Strunk and White's Elements of Style with Kernighan and Plauger's book The Elements of Programming Style shows how a program resembles an essay.

Designing the structure of a program requires one to think like an architect. Shore feels that "Structure is the key to coping with software's intrinsic complexity." In order to visualize this complexity, consider that,

"In two hours on a computer that executes a million instructions per second (fast, but still modest by supercomputer standards), about seven billion instructions get executed. Constructed from billions of their basic building blocks, computer programs are elaborate structures by any measure.

For comparison, imagine that seven billion pieces are used to construct a skyscraper 200 feet square and 1500 feet tall—that's a total volume of sixty million cubic feet, considerably larger than the Empire State Building.

If this volume were divided into seven billion pieces, the average piece would be a cube with sides about 2.5 inches. In fact, skyscrapers are constructed out of much larger pieces. Computer programs are mankind's most elaborate artifacts."

People who will never write a program still need to get past their anxieties and take advantage of this flexible, capable, pervasive and important tool. The Sacherforte Algorithm is a large step in that direction.

Readers can use it to "Patch the cracks in user-friendly facades" as well as to develop informed opinions about the effects of computers. Reading this book is as much a delight as a reassurance.

The American Dream is theme for January courses

"The American Dream: Past, Present, and Future," is the theme for January term courses at Virginia Wesleyan College.

David G. Garraty, assistant professor in management, business and economics, is the director of the unique program.

"January Term at Virginia Wesleyan provides an opportunity for students and faculty to pursue a single subject of their choice in an intensive two-week course of study in the middle of the academic year," Garraty said.

A number of faculty members are offering courses which relate to the theme. These projects run the gamut from the Broadway musical and Hollywood versions of the American dream to the very real nightmare of hazardous wastes.

On-campus courses include "Determining the Odds on Chemical Risks," "What if the American Dream Became a Nightmare?" "Risky Business: Hollywood's View of Growing Up in America," "Finding Folklore: An Introduction to Fieldwork," and "A Nicer Giant."

In preparation of Black History Month observed in February, a course entitled "The Dream Lives On" will be offered and will focus on the lives, contributions, struggles, and dreams of black Americans.

Other courses offered cover such subjects as cartooning, dream interpretation, law school and legal careers, gourmet cooking the good and bad association of bacteria and food, visiting pre-Revolutionary churches in Virginia, motivating volunteer workers, sewing, and more.

Although these courses carry no academic credit, two January Terms must be successfully completed by students to meet graduation requirements.

Virginia Beach Sun Wheelers roll into action

The basketball makes a swishing sound as it drops through the hoop, echoing the sound of wheels as they spin by. Another practice session has begun for Virginia Beach's wheelchair basketball team.

The Sun Wheelers rolled into action in 1976 under the sponsorship of the Virginia Beach Parks and Recreation Department's Therapeutic Recreation Unit. Since then, the team has played hundreds of games and competed in many tournaments throughout the United States.

Sports

As members of the National Wheelchair Basketball Association, the Sun Wheelers are the only sanctioned team in the Virginia Beach area.

The recent Eighth Annual Mayor's Invitational Tournament in Virginia Beach offered the Sun Wheelers a chance to compare their skills with those of top-rated teams from Canada as well as the U.S.

The Sun Wheelers finished fourth overall in the tournament. They won the first evening, beating Roanoke in a conference game 59 to 58. In the second day's competition they had two losses.

The Sun Wheelers were beaten 61 to 39 by the Carolina Tar Wheels and 62 to 49 by the Twin City Wheelers.

"If I didn't want to win, I wouldn't be here," says Tony Briley, who has been a team member since the Sun Wheelers' first season. "I like to be competitive."

An avid basketball player before a fall left him wheelchair bound, Briley coached basketball for years before hearing about the Sun Wheelers. He now holds a team record for most games played as a Sun Wheeler.

Several other team records are held by Bob Petty, a team member who wasn't sure he'd be able to play when he first joined the team five years ago. He became a starting player in his first game.

Petty, heard about the Sun Wheelers from his brother Tony, a labor supervisor in the Parks Division.

"It takes a lot of practice," Petty, whose idol is basketball legend "Magic" Johnson, said. Petty's record against neighborhood non-wheelchair players is impressive. "I haven't been whiped yet."

Petty made the all-tournament team at the recent Mayor's Invitational.

He and teammate Briley tried out for the wheelchair basketball Olympic team this past summer, and while neither was chosen they agree that the experience was worthwhile.

One reason the Sun Wheelers can concentrate on the game is that they aren't hampered by lack of funds.

"We're the only team in the country funded entirely by a municipality," Buddy Wheeler, therapeutic recreation supervisor said.

Money for extras comes from Sun Wheelers, Inc., a local fundraising group.

New on the Sun Wheeler scene this year is Coach Pam Fisher, who brings four years of playing college basketball at Virginia Wesleyan College to the position. She also serves as head of a range of other wheelchair sports sponsored by the Parks and Recreation Department.

"Pam is a good coach," Petty said. "She has a lot of patience and she's learning fast."

She hasn't had to learn a totally new way of basketball, since the rules for wheelchair basketball are only slightly different from those she played under.

"The fundamentals are still there," she said.

Because wheelchair sports use a lot of upper body strength, she hopes to incorporate weight training into future practices. She is impressed with the team's spirit and willingness to take advice.

"These guys just don't give up," Fisher added. In addition to fostering a competitive spirit, being a team member also offers, other benefits, according to Coach Fisher. "It's an outlet for the team socially as well as recreationally," she said. "This gives them a chance to be a member of a team, socialize, travel and meet new people. Team spirit and morale is really a bonus. One player who is raising these benefits is Randy Harvey, a new team member this season. Before joining the team, he suffered from depression, and he says being a Sun Wheeler has done much to combat this problem.

"This is the first time I've ever been able to compete with any hope of success," Harvey said. "Ironically, I've always tried to compete with able-bodied people."

Team members encourage potential players to join the Sun Wheelers. To find out game dates or how to join the team, call 495-1892. "Once sports gets in your system," Briley said, "it's thewre to stay."

Dare led to career

Usually a play is rehearsed and fine tuned for about four weeks before it is presented to the public, Pryor said.

"This system has given me new insight into my work," she said. "Being right there with actors, I can see when something isn't working and correct it. It is much clearer than when I just read a scene over and over to myself."

Pryor said she is also able to make improvements in the play by picking up on audience response during the performance. In writing her plays Pryor said she draws on her own life experiences. But, she does not write about specific events or people in her life.

"When I try to write about a recent event or someone I'm close to it comes out very flat and two-dimensional," she said. "I draw on experiences but let them just filter down."

"Wetter than Water," for example, is set on an island of the Louisiana coast in the heart of the Bayou country. The play explores the effect a young, mysterious Cajun girl has on those around her and the devastating consequences.

Pryor said that much of her understanding of that area came from stories her father told of growing up in the region.

"Wetter than Water" is really more of a dream state with Louisiana overtones," Pryor said. "The play actually focuses on the isolated couple on the island lost in a world of their own."

What are Pryor's plans for the future? Well, she is just letting things happen as they may right now. She is a member of the Washington D.C. Playwrights Unit, which aids in getting readings for her plays. She also has an agent in New York.

For the present, she plans to stay in Virginia Beach with her parents Dr. Donald and Barbara Pryor. To supplement her income as a playwright, Pryor does bill collecting for her father.

Pryor's first full-length play, "Burrhead," was produced in 1983 at Washington's New Playwright Theatre. Since then her plays have won her the Goucher College Open Circle Playwrights Award and an honorable mention in the FDG/CBS Dramatists Guild Awards.

She has also had readings in New York at the Ensemble Studio Theatre, Circle Repertory Theatre and Double Image Theatre.

Time to begin thinking about income tax returns

Internal Revenue Service estimates 2.5 million individual income tax returns for 1985 will be filed by Virginians. Approximately 127,000 returns will come from Virginia Beach area, according to IRS figures.

The 1985 tax forms are generally unchanged from last year.

There are, however, a number of changes in the tax laws to consider when completing the returns.

*The tax tables and schedules have been adjusted so that inflation will not increase taxes.

Indexing has also increased to $1,040 the amount allowed as a deduction for each exemption claimed on the return—and the zero bracket amounts for all filing statuses have increased.

The amount for single individuals is now $2,390 and for married persons filing a joint return the figure is $3,540.

*There are changes related to divorced and separated individuals.

The exemptions for children of divorced or separated parents will be claimed by the parent having custody unless that parent waives the right to claim the exemption or a pre-1985 written agreement states the non-custodial parent can claim the child.

Under a pre-1985 agreement, the non-custodial parent must provide at least $600 for the child's support.

Those individuals recently separated from their spouse may file as unmarried if they did not live with their spouse at all during the last six months of the year and their child is living with them.

*Beginning in 1985, the deduction for use of a car in performing services for a charitable organization has increased to 12 cents per mile.

If the total deductions for gifts of property is more than $500, a form listing the property must accompany the tax return.

For 1985, if individuals do not itemize deductions, they may deduct one-half of their charitable contributions.

*Those individuals who use their automobiles for business purposes can claim 21 cents per mile for the first 15,000 miles of business use of their cars in 1985.

*Original owners of a diesel-powered car, van, or light truck after January 1, 1985 may be entitled to a one-time credit or refund of diesel fuel tax.

Additional information on these topics and other changes appears in the instructions which come with the tax package.

Last year some Virginians may have received their refunds later than usual because of problems that arose from major changes the IRS made to its returns processing system.

The IRS has resolved these problems by installing more computer equipment, redesigning computer programs, and increasing its staff to improve the level of service to the public.

The IRS is advising Virginians to file their returns as soon as all the necessary records are available from employers and financial institutions.

Individuals who file at the last minute are more likely to make errors on their returns. Common errors which delay processing include mathematical errors, incorrect use of the tax tables, and entries on the wrong lines.

A review of the return before it is mailed will avoid many of these errors. Processing of a return will be faster if an individual uses the pre-printed label on the tax package and the envelope provided with the tax form.

The Internal Revenue Service will continue to provide toll-free telephone service and walk-in assistance to Virginians.

The hours for the Norfolk office are 8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The office is in the Federal Building on Granby Mall.

In addition, the IRS will offer group return preparation assistance in local communities during and after normal working hours and on weekends as part of its Outreach Program.

The toll-free number is 1-800-424-1040. This number is less busy early in the morning or later in the day and during days later in the week.

The IRS said many answers to general tax questions can be found in the tax package instructions or in over 90 free IRS publications that can be requested using the order form in the tax package, or by calling 1-800-424-3676.

Virginians can also use Tele-Tax, a service that provides recorded tax information on topics of general interest. The Tele-Tax telephone number is 1-800-554-4477.

Virginia Beach Fire Department offering free inspections

In an effort to curb preventable fire tragedies involving loss of life and home, the Virginia Beach Fire Department is offering free inspections of fireplaces, woodburning stoves, and other portable heating appliances to city residents during the winter season.

According to Captain Joey Weinbrecht, who works in fire inspections for the Fire Prevention Bureau, the people who need to take advantage of this free service usually don't.

"The most frustrating part of my job," said Weinbrecht, "is trying to make the public understand the importance of taking prevention seriously."

"Our eyes are trained to see obvious fire hazards, things that the general public won't think to notice. We know how fire travels and how heat travels through walls, contributing to fire. Too many times, we've pointed out a potential hazard with a chimney or wood stove only to be told that 'that unit's worked fine for five years or so'. The next week we may find ourselves risking our lives to save that house."

Every year winter comes around bringing with it a few months of an again-off again bitter cold and blustery winds. The season is accompanied by the roar of fire engines as they stream through the city streets, rescue vehicles close behind. In too many cases, fires were indeed preventable.

Most tragic losses by fire are due to negligence or lack of knowledge of the appliances and fuels being used.

It may take a few dollars to buy a life saving device such as a fire extinguisher, a few minutes to install a smoke detector, or a phone call and a bit of inconvenience to engage the services of a professional chimney cleaner. But these costs are small when compared to the replacement of a home or the lifelong grief caused by a child lost in a fire.

Captain Weinbrecht, 12 years with the city's Fire Department, offers some easy tips that, taken seriously, may save a life.

Safety Tips

•Contact a professional chimney cleaner to rid chimney of creosote buildup.

Creosote is a combination of moisture and acetic acid caused from resins in the wood.

Cleaning should be done at least once a year, and especially prior to using the fireplace for the first time each winter.

Creosote built up from last year's hot fire. There is a creosote build-up if the chimney walls or door on the woodstove are black and shiny.

•Don't let children near the fireplace.

They shouldn't be permitted to toss tissues or paper into the fire, as they may be tempted to do so when parents are not in the room. Especially keep an eye on them if they wear flowing nightclothes. Be sure to keep the screen in place, as popping embers can ignite carpet and furniture.

•In a new townhouse or condo be careful with the fireplace.

If planning to add doors, install only the doors designed for that particular make and model. Do not modify the design or add anything that has not been tested by manufacturer with the pre-fab unit.

•Artificial logs are nice for atmosphere and so convenient, but be sure to follow instructions. The directions should state that they are safe for burning in woodburning stoves or pre-fab fireplaces.

If they have a wax base (to bond them), don't use them. Wax burns at a high intensity and can cause internal damage to the structure of the heating unit. Instead, the wrapper may say "Do not remove paper"—if it does, by all means, do NOT remove the paper!

•Use the correct fuel with kerosene heaters. Manufacturers' tests are done with 1-K fuel, so the standards and warranties quoted on labels are based on 1-K fuel.

Remember the symptoms of carbon monoxide and sulphur dioxide poisoning—headaches, burning eyes, and nausea. These symptoms result from a cruder fuel being burned or inadequate ventilation, or improper use of the unit. Do not use gasoline in a kerosene heater!

•To prevent chimney fire from getting out of hand, keep an all purpose fire extinguisher handy, located in the direction of the exit, so it can be grabbed, used, and the person can keep on running out the door if necessary.

This prevents having to run back toward the fire to get out of the house.

•Get a permit from the Department of Permits and Inspections (427-4211) to install wood stoves or free standing fireplaces. This department is there to protect the consumer, so it's worth the extra phone call and paper work.

•In case of fire in a wood burning stove, if it appears to be getting out of hand, close the stove doors and the air flow control knobs. Then call the Fire Department.

Do not open the stove door, as the back flash could blow the fire into the living room.

•Kids and kerosene heaters: The tops of kerosene heaters can become very hot and children have been known to suffer third degree burns on their hands as a result of a curious touch.

Parents of small children might want to temporarily bypass portable heaters that are easily tripped over or bumped into by an energetic toddler unless strict supervision can be applied.

Kerosene heaters should only be used in well-ventilated rooms and should not be placed in a pathway, such as a hall.

•Install and test a smoke detector. It's just a few dollars. Establish the habit of testing it once a month. They all have test buttons. If they beep when tested, they are working.

View of the Methane Gas Recovery project at Virginia Beach Landfill No 2 on Centerville Turnpike.

Turning trash into money

Energy Limited, a New Jersey-based firm.

Under an agreement with American, VNG will receive up to one million cubic feet of pipeline quality gas per day from the landfill, according to Starkey. The gas must meet pipeline standards for purity and heat content.

VNG expects to receive enough gas from the landfill to fuel 900 to 1,100 homes on a winter day, according to Ann Rasic, VNG director of Gas Fuel Supply.

"During the winter, a peak consumption time, we must use higher cost gas to meet the demand," Rasic said. "The gas from the landfill will enable us to help offset this cost."

For the approximately 16,000 residential gas customers in Virginia Beach the individual savings is minimal, she said. Rasic estimated individual savings for customers at about $6 per year.

American has begun work to construct the necessary wells and gathering equipment to recover the gas. The facilities are expected to be installed and operational by mid-summer.

VNG is paying for the project, which is expected to cost about $2.2 million, McClanahan said.

The project also has environmental benefits.

"As a recycling project it is ideal," McClanahan said. "First by recycling the trash then converting it back to recover the methane is wonderful."

The gas formed at the landfill is the result of anaerobic decomposition of refuse deposited at the landfill, Starkey said. The materials anaerobic decomposition at the landfill is similar to the naturally occurring process that has produced fossil fuels during the ages. The process is just speeded up in this type of project.

The refuse at the landfill is producing recoverable amounts of methane about 14 months after being deposited and covered, according to David Ehrlich, American president. There will be an adequate production of the methane within the landfill for approximately 15 years.

There is also the potential that additional amounts of methane will be produced at the site during the next 15 years, Rasic said. More likely, she added, this site will be closed and a new site opened after 15 years.

Lynnhaven DAR honors good citizens

Nichelle Leigh Cobb of Kempsville High School, Peter Koehler-Pfotenbauer of Green Run High School, and Angela Umphers of Tabernacle Baptist High school have been Good Citizens by the Lynnhaven Parish Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

The National Society DAR established a Committee in 1934 to recognize and reward the qualities of Good Citizenship among senior high students.

The three DAR chapters of Virginia Beach sponsor this contest in the accredited senior high schools in the city.

The student selected from each school must exemplify the qualities of leadership, dependability, service and patriotism.

The student winner receives a Good Citizens Pin and Certificate. Then his qualifications are judged on the state level. The State Winner is given a special pin and a cash award of $100 and is then in competition for the title of Divisional Good Citizen and an award of $250. He is then eligible to compete for the honor of being named the National Good Citizen.

The National Good Citizen is presented to the DAR's Continental Congress, which meets in Constitution Hall, Washington, D.C. during April. At that event, he or she receives a sterling silver bowl suitably engraved along with a $1,000 scholarship to be sent to the college of his choice.

Mrs. Nevelyn Stark serves as Chairman of the Good Citizens Committee for the Lynnhaven Parish Chapter.

Innovative programs

The new system would also benefit the approximately 150 families near the North Carolina border who currently cannot use the 911 system, Wall said.

"The enhance 911 system will make 911 services available to all Virginia Beach residents," he said. "This is one of the greatest benefits of the system."

The department is also in the process of obtaining a new 800 megahertz trunk radio system, Wall said. This system will greatly increase the number of channels available to the police department as well as other departments in the city that use the radios.

"Because of the capacity of our current system we are able to use a limited number of channels," Wall said. "The 800 megahertz system will provide us with about 20 more channels. Especially at peak times, like the holidays, this will be a great help. At peak times, with the current system, the channels often become jammed."

Another advantage of the 800 megahertz system is that special grouping of channels can be made, according to Wall. If, for example, there is an incident that requires the police and fire departments as well as public utilities, a special grouping can be made so that they can communicate with one another without tying up the main channels.

Wall said the police department will begin to use the new system within a year. He said it will take 18 to 24 months for the system to be operational throughout the department and at least another six months for it to be effective city wide.

Wall said the department is working on a number of other innovations, but the implementation of these is tied up in the current budgeting process.

Wall stressed that the cooperation the department receives from the city manager and the City Council are essential factors in the department's ability to implement innovative programs.

"Without the support of the manager and the City Council we could sit up here and come up with millions of programs but they would just be dreams," Wall said.

The Adam Thoroughgood Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, presented three area students with Good Citizens' awards. Each student was presented a Good Citizen Certificate and pin by Louise Wicker.

The Good Citizen award is based on the student's leadership, which includes personality, self-truthfulness, loyalty, punctuality, service, which includes cooperation, courtesy, and consideration of others; patriotism, which includes unselfish interest in family, school, community and nation, to an outstanding degree.

It is recommended that the senior class choose, by vote, three seniors having the above qualifications. From the three, the faculty selects one student to represent the school.

These winners names, recommendations and submitted writings have been sent to the district chairman for further competition at District and State level.

The three students selected were:

John C. Balderson, Cape Henry Collegiate School, son of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Balderson.

Balderson is a strong student, winning the National English

Merit Award. He is responsible in his home helping with brothers and sister. He is interested in the community and is active in his church. John hopes to attend the University of Virginia and study medicine.

Elizabeth H. VonKolnitz, Cox High School, daughter of Mr.

and Mrs. Henry VonKolnitz.

VonKolnitz is an outstanding student at Cox, being chosen for Who's Who Among American High School Students. She is active in many clubs and has held many offices. At home she is helpful and is active in her church.

Tina Carter, Princess Anne High School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Carter.

Carter is a member of the National Honor Society, she is an outstanding student and plans to attend William and Mary. She is active in her church and home, helping in many ways.

The Adam Thoroughgood Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution recently awarded three Virginia Beach high school students the DAR Good Citizen Award. Great Neck archeological site needs to be rescued

University, under a contract with the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation. A report on that work is currently being drafted.

While most of the Great Neck Site is already destroyed by construction of houses and streets, parts of it yet remain, which can (with the lot-owners' permissions) be studied. As a result of local interest in the site, state funding is being made available to test those areas early in 1986. Just how much is to be dug is unknown.

Costs of project

Costs of the work done at Great Neck thus far have varied. The work done by Painter and his student and volunteer helpers has not cost the state or localities any money.

The 1981 work done by Turner was supported by VRCA, using funds from state and federal sources, totalling about $10,000.

The cost of the James Madison University work in 1984 was paid out of federal and state highway construction funds, with a total of about $275,000.

Cost of the planned 1986 work is not yet certain. Costs can be kept low if volunteers are invited to provide much of the work force, and if City-owned equipment can be provided to move topsoil as needed. Obviously, the cost of archeological work can vary considerably, as can the results. An element of luck is always present in digging. Sometimes a lot of expensive work will produce only a few new facts, while in another effort, much important new data can come from limited work.

It is impossible to predict results ahead of time with any degree of assurance. Because of this uncertainty, some people might ask if the results justify the costs. This brings us to the questions, "What price is Virginia's Heritage?" How can one put a dollar value on information? What is society willing to pay to learn the fate of the Lost Colony? What is it worth to learn how it was lived in and adjusted to an In- coastal environment? What can we learn from them that will help us adjust to that environment today? At what price, and whose cost?

While there are many opinions on how the above questions should be answered, this writer ventures the following estimate, based on his many years of archeological work in Virginia and elsewhere. A reasonable figure would, in my opinion, be around ten cents per year per person in the Commonwealth. This would make about $550,000 a year available for needed archeological work throughout Virginia. While it is unlikely today that the Virginia General Assembly would appropriate funding in this amount, that body might make part of the amount available as a show of interest by the State.

Accordingly, other ways for meeting the needs should be developed. Again, I can suggest some ways to meet the needs, while at the same time, involving the public closely with the work.

One way of raising the needed funds would be a check-off contribution on Virginia Income Tax Return, Form 760. An amount for archeology could be designated by the payer, similar to the method used to obtain funds for wildlife protection. Alternatively, the method used by the U.S. Internal Revenue Service could be followed. In this, a taxpayer indicates that one dollar of the payment can go toward funding national elections. A similar designation could be for archeological work.

Either way could be tried for a few years, and if found to be unpopular or insufficient, the method could change. In either case, action by the General Assembly would be needed to have the Department of Taxation collect and distribute the taxpayers' contributions.

Another approach, which I highly recommend be tried, is the local archeological program, such as that in effect in Fairfax and Alexandria, both of which support a full-time archeological effort. Every city and county needs an archeologist at times.

Since most cities and counties cannot afford a full-time archeologist, the solution is to hire a part-time archeologist. Under this plan, a locality could meet its archeological needs by paying a small retainer fee to an individual archeologist, living nearby and knowing the people and the countryside.

The work would include watching for sites exposed in coastal erosion, inspecting construction sites ahead of construction and investigating finds made by any citizen of the area.

The individual could be the locality's Staff Archeologist and as such could add much to the cultural life of the locality, through teaching, lecturing, helping with local exhibits, leading field trips, and similar efforts.

For the Tidewater area, I would recommend one archeologist to be shared by the cities of Virginia Beach, Norfolk, Portsmouth and Chesapeake, and the counties of Northampton and Accomack.

This makes six governments for which the archeologist would work, and the archeologist would divide his time among them, according to the needs and how much the localities pay.

If the archeologist works an average of twenty-four days a month, each of the six localities could get an average of four days a month, or forty-eight days a year. Most of the work would be on behalf of the locality government, especially the planning and public works departments.

However, other work could be done on private lands at the request of individual landowners who see site evidence or suspect a site is present. There need be no charge to the landowner, since the county or city retainer would cover the costs.

The work would be primarily survey work, with limited testing to determine a site's importance (or non-importance). More extensive work, such as excavation, would then be arranged for and funded separate from the survey contract.

Since the cost of an archeologist's pay and expenses is around $125 per day, a locality receiving four days service would pay a monthly fee of $500, for an annual total of $6000 for forty-eight days archeological work. This figure is substantially less than the cost of a full-time archeological set-up, and also is less than having forty-eight days work done under individual contracts for specific projects, as must be done at present.

Other plans might be devised for specific projects, such as that needed for the Great Neck Site, among scores of others in eastern Virginia.

The question "What price is Virginia's heritage?" is a knotty one. However, it can be solved, if landowners, government officials, and concerned citizens attack the problems constructively and with good will.

The work needs to be done, and it need not cost some outrageous figure. With public involvement, projects can be done with the least cost, and every participant will enjoy the good feeling which comes from doing a needed and important job well and efficiently.

Cahill's City Council Corner

Community College Week proclaimed

The Tidewater Community College campus in Virginia Beach is one of the strongest entities in the city, Councilman J. Henry McCoy Jr. said in connection with a proclamation of Community College Week Jan. 19-25.

Dr. George Pass, TCC president, said that for the first time this year, the Virginia Beach program is out of Camp Pendleton, where it started, and completely in its own buildings on the Princess Anne Road campus. He said that 15,000 students will be served at the Beach campus this year.

Percent program for arts requested

The Virginia Beach Arts and Humanities Commission has requested City Council to adopt a Percent for the Arts program for the city.

Under the program, the city would contribute a certain percentage (one percent) of its Capital Improvement Budget for the purchase of art for public places.

Andrew S. Fine, commission chairman, said, however, that the commission is not tied to the one percent and the allocation can be figured under another formula. If the one percent program is approved, the commission will have $224,893 a year over the next five years with which to commission art.

Council, generally, liked the concept. Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. said, that the proposal was premature because the city had so many other pressing problems. He did not think the program was a city function and should be a function of private enterprise. Councilwoman Nancy Creech asked whether any research had been done to determine how private developers could participate in the plan.

"Down the road, we would like to see a contribution by developers," Fine said.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf, who liked the concept, also asked about private support. She said that in other states, because of the cutback in federal and state funds, corporations have adopted parks. She proposed a dollar match with public funds.

Fine said that major corporations in Virginia Beach have been good about making commitments to art in the city. He said that one of the cornerstones of the commission program is to set up a private trust for the arts.

Councilwoman Barbara Healey said her concern was making the allocation part of the city's bond package. She wanted to know where the money was coming from.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that the money may have to be transferred from the general fund to the CIP.

Henley concluded that the allocation would be encumbering the bonds or the operating budget.

Councilman J. Henry McCoy Jr. said he would be more comfortable with a set amount rather than the percentage, but found the concept "good."

Mayor Harold Heischober said that the operating budget may be the better place to include the program.

Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan said the concept was excellent and long overdue, while Councilman Robert G. Jones expressed some misgivings about the possible controversy over the art selected.

Heischober, noting that Jennings said that the program was premature, said that he had phone calls saying "we're ten years too late."

Council will consider an ordinance on Jan. 27 establishing the program.

Commercial property deterioration studied

The city staff has been asked to look into the "overall general deterioration" of the commercial property which backs onto Cape Henry Drive.

Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. asked the staff to study the problem and to ask for the cooperation of local businessmen to improve the appearances of the property.

The subject came up in connection with a road closure request which was approved with a number of stipulations.

South Bay Corporation was granted the closure for a portion of Holly Avenue beginning at the eastern boundary of Jade Street and running for 167.04 feet in Lynnhaven Shores.

Area residents opposed the closure but requested additional safeguards with the approval of the closure.

Noting against the closure were Councilman John A. Baum, Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan and Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf.

Alfonso Strazzullo, representing Lynnhaven Shores, asked that the height of any building on the 25-foot street be restricted to two stories, that a fence be constructed. He also requested that a tree line 25 to 30 feet high be retained, and a retention system by used for drainage.

The height restriction and buffer were incorporated in the motion.

Apartment complex rezoning okayed

As City Council approved a rezoning against the recommendation of the Planning Commission, Councilwoman Barbara Henley wanted to know "what happened to our firm policy" that council was not going to approve any applications unless all the agreements were available to council.

On a motion by Councilwoman Nancy Creech, council approved by a vote of 7-3 the application of Carl J. Ward for a change of zoning from R-8 Residential District to A-3 Apartment District for 470 and 474 Hollis Road.

Dismissing were Councilwoman Henley and Meyera Oberndorf. Councilmen H. Jack Jennings, Jr. and Louis R. Jones were absent.

Grover Wright, attorney for Ward, said his client wanted to build two eight-unit buildings. A-2, a less dense apartment zoning, would permit him to bid only 14 units. While A-3 would permit him to build 19 units, he said that he would agree to a deed restriction that the units be limited to 16.

No agreement was available to council, however, at the time the rezoning decision was made.

Council has a policy requiring agreements to be submitted ahead of time. Creech's motion was conditioned on a deed restriction limiting the number of units to 16.

ASSE seeking host families for students

The International Student Exchange Programs (ASSE) is seeking Virginia Beach families to host 15 Scandinavian, French, Spanish, German, Dutch, Swiss and Canadian girls and boys, 16 to 18 years of age, coming to this area for the next school year. These European and Canadian teens are anxious to learn about this country through living as part of a family, attending high school and sharing their own culture and language with their newly adopted American family.

The students are fluent in English and are sponsored by ASSE, a non-profit, public benefit organization, affiliated with the Swedish and Finnish Departments of Education and cooperating with the Canadian Provincial Ministries of Education.

The exchange students arrive from their home country shortly before school begins in late August and return at the end of the school year in June.

Each ASSE student is fully insured, brings his or her own personal spending money and expects to bear his or her share of household responsibilities, as well as being included in normal family activities and lifestyle.

The students are well screened and qualified by ASSE. Families may select the youngster of their choice from extensive student applications, family photos and biographical essays.

Students and families are encouraged to begin corresponding prior to the students arrival.

ASSE is also seeking Virginia Beach high school students to become ASSE exchange students abroad. Students should be between 15 and 18 years old.

Students should have a good academic record and the desire to experience a European or Canadian culture and language through living with a warm and giving volunteer family.

For information about becoming a host family or becoming a student abroad should contact ASSE's local representative: Brenda McAleer, 496-0718 or write to Brenda at 2299 St. Marshall Rd., Virginia Beach, VA 23454.

Lustig recommended for judgeship

Virginia Beach lawyer Wayne Lustig is one of three candidates recommended by U. S. Sen. John W. Warner, R-Va., for a judgeship in Virginia's Eastern U. S. District Court.

Lustig, long active in Republican politics, is a former chairman of the 2nd Congressional District Republican Committee.

Warner recommended the candidates as possible replacements for Judge John A. MacKenzie, 68, of Portsmouth, who has entered semi-retirement after 18 years on the bench.

Warner said he expected President Reagan to send a nominee to the U. S. Senate in the spring and that the nominee would get up for confirmation in July.

Judicial appointees are screened by the Senate Judiciary Committee and confirmed by the full Senate.

Watermen crabby over sanctuary restrictions

By Cheryl Martin
staff writer

Virginia Beach watermen want the General Assembly to pass legislation allowing crab harvesting between the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel and Cape Henry Lighthouse from May 1 through Sept. 1. The Virginia Waterman's Association has asked City Council to support the request.

This area is part of a protected sanctuary that has been restricted to commercial crabbers during the summer months for approximately 44 years. The sanctuary was established to protect crab during the spawning season because they are extremely vulnerable to capture at this time. A triangular area, the sanctuary extends from Willoughby Spit to the Cape Henry Lighthouse to the Eastern Shore.

For Virginia Beach watermen, this restriction has meant turning to the inland waterways of the Lynnhaven System as the source for their crabs. All this commercial crabbing activity in the Lynnhaven System, which includes the eastern and western branches of the Lynnhaven River, Long Creek (which connects Broad Bay to the Lynnhaven Inlet) and Broad and Linkhorn bays, has led to over crowding.

"In recent years the number of crab pots has reached almost intolerable levels, so that citizens who utilize these same bodies of water for recreational pursuits

Virginia Beach watermen David Portlock (front) and Bob Crisher secure crab pots they have stored at D&M Marine, off Shore Drive in Virginia Beach. They say opening part of the crab sanctuary in the Chesapeake Bay will give them a place to crab. Currently they must rely on the inland waterways of the Lynnhaven system and ocean areas to place their pots. Helping them is Bobby Crisher, 5.

Old Donation Parkway controversy not over

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Although a consultant backed away from the Old Donation Parkway project before an onslaught of area residents, City Council apparently is unwilling to throw in the sponge yet.

King's Grant area residents, who objected to having the road included in the Master Street and Highway Plan, thought their interests would be best served by getting the right-of-way acquired for the project away from the city and into the possession of the original property owners. That would end their on-again-off-again status once and for all. Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. told council.

He asked council, accordingly, to adopt a resolution directing the city manager and the city attorney to report back to City Council the method the city should use in disposing of the right-of-way.

Other council members, seven of them, in fact, disagreed. They wanted to wait until they adopted the highway plan which will be considered by the Planning Commission in February or March.

Veterans redoubling efforts to raise funds for memorial

Spurred on by an endorsement of the Hampton Roads Council of Veterans Organizations, the Virginia Beach Veterans Memorial Committee, Inc. will redouble its efforts to raise approximately $200,000 to construct a Tidewater Veterans Memorial monument on 19th Street opposite the Virginia Beach Pavilion. Target date for completion is Veterans Day (November 11) of this year.

In order to make this memorial a truly Tidewater project, the Virginia Beach Committee will rotate its meetings throughout the area.

The Senior Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of financial, business and building organizations will be enlarged to include the mayors (or their personal representatives) of the cities of Norfolk, Portsmouth and Chesapeake.

Letters of request for participation on the advisory committee will be mailed out to each of Tidewater Mayors.

Mayor Harold Heischobor of Virginia Beach is already a member of the advisory committee and he is also a member of the board of directors of the Virginia Beach Memorial Committee.

William Myers, treasurer and director of fund raising reported that due to the holidays, fund raising had been restrained, but added that the Cavalier Garden Club of Virginia Beach had presented a $1,000 check to Fred M. Tripp, president of the committee.

Willia Zieger, a member of the Vietnam Veterans of America is now serving on the board of directors of the Virginia Beach Veterans Memorial Committee.

Caring for others is motivation

By Cheryl Martin

Caring for other people is what motivates Clarence W. Keel of Virginia Beach in both his professional and civic activities.

Keel, president of the Seaboard Saving and Loan Association, has been named to the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation's National Council of Volunteers. He is also the chairman of the March of Dimes National Teletthon Against Birth Defects for the Tidewater Chapter.

"Caring and wanting to help others is what keeps me involved with the March of Dimes," Keel, 38, said. "That, and wanting to help give children a better chance in life. In my work...I think it is the same thing. I have the opportunity to help people, whether it's with buying a home or a car. In the case of my employees, I am able to help them grow as professionals and as individuals."

Keel, who was raised in Portsmouth, attributes his caring attitude to having grown up in a large family with caring parents.

"It is very scary when your first child is only three hours old and the doctor says he's not going to live. I can relate to that. I can also relate to when they tell you your child will be fine. I think I cried both times, but the second was much more joyous than the first."—Clarence Keel and many great nieces and nephews. We still all get together at Christmas. My parents had a great love for one another and a strong desire to help others. They instilled this in all of us. If you're not taught as a kid to care, helping people is hard to develop at 40."

Keel, who has been actively involved with the March of Dimes for the past seven years, has held a variety of positions with the Tidewater chapter, ranging from walk chairman to fundraising coordinator to chairman of the chapter's board of directors.

Keel said he first really realized the effect that birth defects can have on a family when he was a young teenager. His sister's first child, who was born with spina bifida and other birth defects, lived only 25 days.

When the opportunity came along to work with an organization like the March of Dimes, "that is doing such a tremendous job in helping to find ways to save babies born with birth defects," Keel said he couldn't pass it up.

"My first son was born with a minor birth defect, fortunately he was completely cured," Keel said. "It is very scary when your first child is only three hours old and the doctor says he's not going to live. I can relate to that. I can also relate to when they tell you your child will be fine. Textbooks recommended for adoption are on display

New textbooks recommended for adoption in the public schools of Virginia Beach are on display at several locations throughout the city. Texts to be used in a number of subject areas have been under consideration during this school year.

On the secondary level, foreign-language, social studies, and language arts textbooks have been recommended. Language arts and social studies textbooks have been recommended at the elementary level.

The texts will be on display at each of the five branches of the Virginia Beach Public Library through Tuesday, Feb. 18. In addition, the books will be on display at the School Administration Building in the municipal complex on Princess Anne Road.

At their meeting on Feb. 18 the School Board will take action on the adoption of the recommended textbooks. Should the recommendation of the Depart-

Priority is education

"Johnny" reads on an elementary school level, but he is in college because he is an outstanding athlete. Many think he's headed for the pros.

He has never had to seriously perform academically in school because he has always been a star athlete.

What happens if "Johnny" doesn't make it to the pros? What happens if he suffers a severe injury or someone a little better beats him out. Where will he be? He can't fall back on his education, because he doesn't have one. Is he really any better off than the kid that quit school at 15?

Johnny is an imaginary person, but there are student athletes in Virginia Beach as well as other towns that could easily be Johnny.

While competing in athletics may be beneficial to students, the school's first priority should be to see that these students receive an education. Without an education these students will be unable to compete in a much more important game—the job market.

Virginia Beach Del. J. W. "Billy" O'Brien is introducing legislation that would toughen the academic standards for public school students who participate in school athletics and other extracurricular activities.

Under present standards, students are allowed to participate if they passed at least four courses the previous semester. The guidelines are enforced by the Virginia High School League, (VHSL) an association whose membership consists of one principal from each of Virginia's 284 public high schools.

O'Brien's proposal would mandate that students pass at least five courses every grading period. Most students take six courses each grading period. In such cases, his proposal would allow them to fail one subject per grading period. However, a student would become ineligible if he failed the same subject during two consecutive grading periods.

In addition, O'Brien's bill would mandate that students maintain a minimum 1.6 cumulative grade point average each grading period to remain eligible.

The average is computed by assigning four points for an "A", three points for a "B" and so on. A student receiving straight A's would have a 4.0 average. The 1.6 average means that students could receive less than straight C's and still participate in extracurricular activities.

A student could meet the existing guidelines for all four years in high school and still not achieve enough credits to graduate, according to O'Brien. To receive a high school degree, a student must get credit for passing 20 courses, an average of five a year.

O'Brien's legislation is a step in the right direction. For the students sake, a mandatory C average standard would be even more appropriate.

His proposal has not been received very well. Members of the State Board of Education and the state NAACP have said that these tougher standards could result in some students dropping out of school.

William J. Burkholder, Virginia education department deputy superintendent, said that the proposed law is too rigid and does not take into account students with low intelligence and learning disabilities. He added that students might be encouraged to avoid difficult courses.

W. Paul Matthews, executive secretary of Virginia's NAACP, contends that the proposal has

Police's stand commended

Virginia Beach police officers should be commended for the hard stand they have taken on drunk driving.

Angered by what they perceived to be the city's judicial leniency, police recently crowded the court docket with almost 100 DUI (driving under the influence) cases.

Police officers said the court's low conviction and high dismissal rates have discouraged police from pursuing drunken driving cases. Arrests in Virginia Beach for driving under the influence dropped sharply last year. In 1984, police arrested 2,152 people on DUI charges. Last year that number dropped to 1,427.

Statistics show that in 1985 Virginia Beach courts convicted about 77 percent of those people arrested for drunk driving. The statewide conviction rate was 88 percent, according to the Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles.

In order for laws against drunk driving to serve as a deterrent, people who are caught driving under the influence must be punished. It takes everyone—citizens, police and courts—working together to bring an end to this continuing problem.—C.M.

Protect children's eye sight

Nowhere is the world more wonderful and awe inspiring than in the eyes of a child. However, every year over 160,000 children suffer serious eye injuries. Many of these injuries could be prevented by children wearing safety eyewear at home, school and play.

Young active lifestyles in Every year over 160,000 children suffer serious eye injuries. Many of these injuries could be prevented by children wearing safety eyewear at home, school and play.

Virginia Beach require adequate protection. To guard against injury, The National Society to Prevent Blindness—Virginia Affiliate recommends that children who wear glasses, wear glasses at all times which meet ANSI Z87.1 industrial standards for safety.

Commentary

Many everyday objects are threats to young eyes—soda bottles, clothes hangers, projectile toys, a variety of pointed objects, BB guns, fireworks, and baseballs.

A child may not remember to take off his or her glasses when playing soccer or to change to a safer pair before climbing a tree. Therefore, they should only wear lenses and frames that meet or exceed ANSI Z87 standards, because they provide an added margin of safety over ordinary street eyewear.

Eyewear must pass rigorous tests of strength and reliability to earn the Z87 stamp. Now that safety eyewear that meets industrial standards is available for children, its use is recommended to prevent many of the traumatic and blinding eye injuries that occurred in the past.

Ask eye care professionals for safety glasses.

"Bottle Bill" makes good sense

By Linwood Holton
Recycling of beverage containers makes good business sense. Why is the basic fact so thoroughly ignored in the discussion of a "bottle bill" for Virginia?

Nine states now add a refundable nickel or dime deposit to the cost of beer and soft drink containers. These states report an 80 percent drop in beverage container litter.

That is hardly surprising. Making beverage bottles or cans worth a dime gives the consumer incentive to return the containers. It gives people incentive to pick up bottles and cans which can carelessly discarded.

Each year three billion bottles and cans are thrown away in Virginia. Many of these end up on our highways, along our beaches, and in our fields and rivers and parking lots. The rest wind up in our already overcrowded landfills. Either way, Virginia taxpayers pay a high price to dispose of these containers.

*Tourism: Beverage containers comprise 40 to 60 percent (by weight and volume) of roadside litter and 60-80 percent of litter in our parks. This has real implications for the state's $4 billion tourist trade, the third largest business in the Old Dominion. Vermont and other states which have enacted container legislation have realized, as we in Virginia should, that clean highways and parks lure visitors.

*Trash pickup: Government figures reveal that it costs Virginia's state and local agencies at least $10 million annually to pick up beverage containers. Merchants spend considerable sums to remove such litter from parking lots and other areas where it is discarded.

*Trash disposal: Authorities calculate that it costs $7 million each year to dispose of Virginia's bottles and cans in the state's solid waste landfills. The rapid increase in solid waste generation and a sharp decline of available land for disposal sites have resulted in a near crisis for many of Virginia's localities. We could prolong the life of our landfills by reducing the volume they must handle.

*Farmers: A study by the Virginia State Farm Bureau reveals that throwaway beer and soft drink containers cost state farmers between $1.2 and $3.5 million annually in damage to equipment and time spent in cleaning up this litter.

*Safety: Discarded bottles and cans cause thousands of injuries each year in Virginia. Experts estimate that bicyclists in Virginia spend $1 million a year in bicycle tire and tube replacement caused by broken glass from discarded bottles.

At the same time, the "bottle bill" has significant economic benefits.

*Savings to consumers: Beverages sold in refillable bottles cost 35 percent less than those sold in disposable bottles and cans. In the nine states which have enacted container legislation, beer and soft drinks are again available in refillable glass bottles (in addition to cans and plastic containers). At present, Virginians pay the full cost of the container with every one-way, throwaway can or bottle they purchase.

*Energy savings: Recycling bottles and cans saves energy. Recycling aluminum cans, for example, saves 95 percent of the energy to manufacture them from raw materials. Recycling steel cans results in a savings of 74 percent.

Glass manufacturers find that using recycled glass allows them to reduce the temperature of their smelters. This saves energy and extends the life of the smelters. A bottle bill in Virginia would provide a local supply of recycled glass to state glass manufacturers which currently acquire crushed glass from bottle bill states like New York, Connecticut and Michigan. This would save a significant amount of energy.

*Increased employment: While it may be true that recycling of beer and soft drink containers would cost some jobs in the container manufacturing industry, studies indicate that container legislation in Virginia would result in a net increase in employment. A "bottle bill" would provide an estimated 1,000 jobs in Virginia in the beverage, retail, transportation and recycling industries. The experience of other states with similar laws confirms this expectation.

Given all these economic facts, it is not surprising that a recent Gallup Poll revealed that 75.9 percent of Virginians supported the "bottle bill" concept. What is surprising is that some Delegates and state senators have not yet come to appreciate the financial benefits of recycling bottles and cans.

For the past decade the Old Dominion has sought to control litter through a program of public education and fines. This has not worked. It is time now to use a more businesslike approach.

Begin work on income taxes now

January is nearing the end and that means it is time to begin working on income tax returns. Or at least this was always my understanding. I'm beginning to find that I am actually part of a small minority that dares to utter the words taxes before at least the middle of March.

In a recent conversation with a friend I was made aware of the reality that most people prefer to put off dealing with income taxes.

She was very astonished that my husband and I had already begun work on our tax returns.

"This is only January. Why on earth are you worrying about taxes now?" she asked. "That is one nightmare we put off until at least the first of April, sometimes longer."

The poor dear almost fell off her chair when I said I never thought of filing taxes as a nightmare. Perhaps this is because we plan and keep files the entire year.

"You mean you actually keep records and file all the receipts and necessary papers in one place?" she said. "Ours are all over the house. It will take me from now until April just to find them!"

Frankly, I was just as astonished by her attitude as she was my mine. I truly cannot comprehend why people choose to put off filing their taxes. The longer any project is postponed the more difficult it appears.

Considering the number of returns that are filed each year—the Internal Revenue Service estimates that 127,000 1985 returns will come from the Virginia Beach area alone—you would think that everyone would want to be the first to get their returns in. The sooner a person files, the sooner they get their refund, if they are entitled to one. If a person owes money, preparing the return early allows more time to come up with the money. It also gives them an earlier chance to correct their filing status at work, so that perhaps next year they won't have to pay.

There are also other advantages to filing early, mainly that it reduces the chance of errors.

The IRS says individuals who file at the last minute are more likely to make errors on their returns. Most of these mistakes result from rushing through the job. Common errors which delay processing include mathematical errors, incorrect use of the tax tables and placing entries on the wrong lines.

When returns are completed well before the April 15 filing deadline there is plenty time to review them before mailing. A good review of the form will more than likely reveal these common errors. Thus the whole problem of delays in processing is avoided.

Keeping good records throughout the year helps to making filing income tax returns easier. This also aids in filling the returns promptly. Obviously some records come from other sources, like employers and financial institutions.

If good records are kept these statements will just confirm the information in personal records. Thus, it is just a matter of waiting for the official documents. These should be available by early February at the latest.

So really there is no excuse for not filing returns early. Maybe you won't make it into the early bird club this year, but good organization and planning will have you ready for next year. Now is the time to start keeping records for your 1986 tax returns.

It is amazing how just a little planning and record keeping make the job of filing taxes so much easier.

In early June of 1984, 100 noted photo journalists arrived in Canada. Their assignment was not to photograph the rich or famous or to document a natural disaster. They had come instead to find and record the heart and soul of the country. The result, A Day in the Life of Canada, is a breathtaking and moving book filled with images of Canada today.

On June 8, the photographers were in place in the villages, cities, mountains and islands throughout the country, ready to spend the next 24 hours recording the events around them. As dawn broke they shot pictures of families getting up, children boarding school buses and farmers feeding their animals.

As the day progressed they made portraits of workers in Book captures the heart of Canada small businesses, on ranches and in paper mills. Ballet classes and prisons, monasteries and shopping malls, all became the focus of their lenses. Breathtaking scenes of the Canadian Rockies and Niagara Falls were interspersed with views of children being born and people being buried.

Over 100,000 pictures were shot on June 8 and the photographers returned to their headquarters with almost as many memorable stories.

Sam Garcia, assigned to the North Magnetic Pole arrived by plane at an isolated ice flow and discovered that his pilot was planning to follow him with a gun because of the proximity of unfriendly polar bears.

In Newfoundland Diego Goldberg's assignment was abruptly changed when he discovered that his subject, a well-known hunter had been killed during a caribou hunt. Goldberg's pictures of the mourners and funeral are a moving tribute to a respected community member.

Others had more light-hearted encounters. In Toronto a formal wedding portrait was disrupted when an automatic lawn sprinkler suddenly came on. The resulting picture by Douglas Kirkland is an action filled view of a wet yet good natured wedding party dashing off in several directions.

Anyone with a special fondness for Canada will certainly want to browse through this book. But others who appreciate good photography or simply enjoy pictures of people being people will find A Day in the Life of Canada a memorable experience.

Trees

By Paul F. Revell
State Forester

Anyone who has observed the rapid growth of Virginia Beach over the last 10 years will not be surprised to learn that the area of Virginia Beach covered by forest has decreased. Still, it is interesting to look at how rapid the decrease has been.

The United States Forest Service has recently released forest statistics for the Coastal Plain of Virginia. These statistics are the first issued since the previous survey in 1976.

The statistics show that timberland acreage is decreasing in Virginia Beach at a rapid rate, reflecting increasing urbanization and conversion to agricultural use.

Total forest land in Virginia

Beach is down 21 percent or 13,000 acres to 48,000 acres which accounts for 29 percent of the city's 164,000 total land acres.

Commercial forest land acreage, that is, acreage available for growing a timber crop, has decreased from 58,000 acres to 45,000 acres.

Farmer-owned timberland acreage dropped 23 percent, this was due in part to land sales for development and clearing of forest land for agricultural production.

Corporation ownership of forest land was up from 6,000 acres to 11,000 acres while individual (non-forest) ownership dropped 5 percent to 24,221 acres.

Forest industry activity has been on the decline in Virginia Beach. This is reflected by the fact that there were no reported holdings of forest land by forest industry. At the time of the previous survey in 1976, forest industry owned 2,590 acres of timberland.

In the 34 counties and large land area cities that were covered in the Forest Service Survey, timberland acreage decreased by 6 percent or 230,000 acres. Timberland now accounts for 38 million acres or 59 percent of total land in Virginia's Coastal Plain.

Virginia Beach Newsweek in Review

The following is a list of some of the major news stories affecting Virginia Beach during the last week.

Commission says build expressway

The city Planning Commission unanimously recommended to build the proposed Southeastern Expressway. Although the exact location of the highway is still unknown, the commission recommended placing a tentative route on the city's Master Street and Highway Plan. This would allow the city to lobby in Richmond for the project.

The six-lane, limited-access highway would begin at the Laskin Road interchange of the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway. It would run along part of London Bridge Road, then veer to the southeast, where it will cross into Chesapeake and hook up with interstates 64 and 464.

The project would cost about $140 million, according to State Highway Department estimates.

The state has said it will not pay for the highway, so tolls may be charged to cover construction costs. Tolls may be kept on the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway beyond 1992 when they are scheduled to expire.

Residents oppose road proposals

About 250 residents jammed into Kempville Recreation Center Saturday to address members of City Council. The residents raised objections to road improvements contained in a proposal from consultants Harland Bartholomew & Associates.

Present to listen to the residents were Mayor Harold Heischobor and council members J. Henry McCoy Jr., Meyera Oberndorf and Louis Jones.

They pledged to oppose two proposals in the $632 million package of road improvements presented by the consultants. One is the extension of Barter Road from Princess Anne Road to Providence Road. The proposal would affect the Brookfield Crossing area of expensive new homes.

Building a flyover at the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway near Mount Trashmore was the other project. The proposal would link Virginia Beach Boulevard with Holland Road, improving the north-to-south traffic flow during rush hour. Residents feel that it would create a heavier flow of traffic on Edwin Drive, which runs past Mount Trashmore and through the Larkspur neighborhood.

The main theme of the meeting was the residents' request that officials promise that they would build beltways and loops and expand existing main roads such as Kempville, Princess Anne and Holland Roads rather than approve the consultants recommendation, which calls for thoroughfares that slice through the heart of Kempville.

it approached the Santa Elena airport, about 150 miles north of Guatemala City.

Holland intends to run against McCoy

F. T. "Tom" Holland announced he will run against Councilman J. Henry McCoy for the Kempville Borough seat in the spring election.

Holland, 38, a clerk for the Norfolk & Western Railway Co., serves as vice chairman of the Wetlands Board.

This is Holland's third try for the City Council. In 1984, he came in fifth among seven candidates for two at-large seats. In 1982, he came in fifth among nine candidates for the other two at-large seats.

He is the fifth candidate to announce for City Council. Others are McCoy, Sheldon L. Corner, John L. Perry and the Rev. Barnett Thoroughgood. Corner said he probably will run for H. Jack Jennings Jr.'s Lynnhaven Borough seat. Perry and Thoroughgood will run for the at-large seats held by Robert G. Jones and Nancy A. Crech.

Surplus funds to be reallocated

A $1.5 million surplus in federal impact funds to the city schools appears likely to be soaked up by higher-than-expected costs of buildings the proposed Salem High School.

At their workshop the School Board members agreed to ask the City Council to reallocate

Noted attorneys to speak at law seminar

Wade M. Smith, local consultant in the "Green Beret Doctor" murder case popularized by the book and movie Fatal Vision.

16th Annual Criminal Law Seminar.

Smith's presentation, "Brave New World—Crushing the Dark Force in the 21st Century," will be delivered on Friday, Feb. 14, at the Fredericksburg Sheraton Motor Inn. Cook will present "A Phoenix Too Frequent" at the Williamsburg Hilton on Friday, Feb. 21.

The seminars are sponsored by the Virginia State Bar's Criminal Law Section in cooperation with the Committee on Continuing Legal Education of the Virginia Law Foundation.

In addition to the luncheon programs, the seminar will feature a variety of professional development sessions throughout the day at each site. Sessions will begin with on-site registration at 8:15 a.m., followed by a welcome and opening remarks by Section Chairman William Robinson, Jr. at 9 a.m. Programs begin at 9:15 a.m., and continue until 4:15 p.m., with the luncheon break at noon. Smith is characterized by Joe McGinniss, author of Fatal Vision, as "a sturdy, gracious, exuberant man... who possessed in an uncommonly full measure, a combination of kindness and wit." McGinniss quoted one of the jurors as saying, months later, that, "We wanted to believe. We really did. Maybe if Wade Smith had just talked to us a little longer..." A senior partner in the Raleigh firm of Harrington, Smith and Hargrove and a native of Albemarle, N.C., he is recognized as one of "the most renowned practitioners of his craft in the state."

Cook has won about 90 percent of the some 250 murder cases he has tried since 1949. The son of a country store owner, Cook was named as one of six criminal lawyers whom his colleagues would "trust their lives with" in a People magazine article in 1978.

He is best known for his criminal trial practice, although his practice has included civil trial work as well. Among his most spectacular court victories is the acquittal in a murder trial of an American soldier in Wiesbaden, Germany in 1965. In another case, Cook convinced a jury in south Ga., made up of people earning less than $20,000 per year, to award the heirs of Andrew and Thomas Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller $5.5 million in taxpayers' money.

A review of recent developments in criminal law at the federal and state levels is slated as the seminar's first session, with Professor Roger D. Groot from Washington and Lee University as the speaker.

At 10:30 a.m., "The Crime Control Act of 1984 and Property Detention in Virginia" will be presented by J. Frederick Sinclair of Cohen, Dunn and Sinclair in Alexandria.

Murray J. Janus from the Richmond firm of Bremner, Baber and Janus will speak at 11:15 a.m. on the sentencing phase of the criminal trial and the attorney's need for preparation.

Following the luncheon session, "Investigation and Preparation of Criminal Cases in Virginia" will be presented at 2 p.m. by Richard G. Brydges from the Virginia Beach firm of Brydges & Brydges.

At 2:45 p.m., James E. Kulp, senior assistant attorney general, and J. Lloyd Snook, III from Charlottesville, will discuss the unique problems involved in preparing capital cases for trial in Virginia.

The day's final session involves a defense attorney and a prosecutor who will examine the intentions and techniques behind the selection of a jury in a criminal case. This program features Guy O. Farley, Jr. of Fairfax and Willard M. Robinson, Jr., Newport News Commonwealth's Attorney.

Anyone interested in attending either session of the seminar should contact the Continuing Legal Education office in Charlottesville at (804) 924-3416. The seminar registration fee, which includes the luncheon and an informational handbook containing topic outlines, is $65 for VSB Criminal Law Section members and $75 for nonmembers.

To reserve a hotel room for the night before either seminar, contact the Sheraton Motor Inn in Fredericksburg by Jan. 31 at (703) 786-9321, or the Williamsburg Hilton on Feb. 7 at (804) 220-2500.

Crabby over restrictions

are severely and adversely affected." Lynnhaven Borough Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. said. "Navigating is very difficult even through the channels because there are crab pots everywhere."

There is also a restriction that prevents setting crab pots in the channels, according to Jack Travelstead, chief of fisheries management division of the Virginia Marine Resources Commission (VMRC). There is no limit on the number of pots a licensed crabber can have. Nor is there any restriction on the distance between pots.

Jennings said if the state would allow crabbing in the restricted area it would alleviate some of the crowding in the Lynnhaven System. He added that this would also help to remedy the unsafe conditions for boaters in the inland waterways. Emmett Sanford, president of the Lynnhaven Watermen's Association, contends that the pots do not get in the way of the boaters. The problem, he said, lies with inexperienced boaters who do not steer clear of the pots or mistake them for channel markers. Water skiers are also a problem, he said. They like to use the crab-pot markers for a course zig-zag in between and sometimes they cut too close.

He did say there has been some problems with pots being placed in the channels. This, he said, is being done by part-time crabbers, not the professional watermen. Sanford said the waterman's association plans to do some self-policing in this area. When watermen find pots in channel areas, Sanford said, they intend to move them to another area.

"We realize that conflicts exist," he said. "We want to

"I don't think opening the sanctuary will stop crabbing in Linkhorn and Broad bays. As long as there are crabs in an area there will be fishermen who want to catch them."—Jack Travelstead, Virginia Marine Resources Commission work with the boaters so that we can all enjoy the waterways."

Jennings said that better education of boaters as well as stricter enforcement of existing regulations would help the situation. But, he said, the fact remains that there are just too many crab pots in Broad and Linkhorn bays and the rest of the Lynnhaven System.

"I wholeheartedly support the lifting of the crabbing restriction in this section of the sanctuary," Jennings said. "I hope the rest of the council will support it also."

Jennings said if necessary he would also support it for a one year trial period.

Some city officials have suggested that the lifting of the crabbing restriction in this segment of the sanctuary be accompanied by a restriction of crabbing in the Lynnhaven System, primarily Linkhorn and Broad bays.

Sanford said the watermen would be willing to accept crabbing restrictions in Linkhorn and Broad bays if the sanctuary restrictions were lifted, but not restrictions on the entire Lynnhaven System.

Travelstead said that his agency could see the reduction of the sanctuary, based on biological information from the Virginia Institute of Marine Science, in and of itself. He added that the VMRC has not made an official statement of support yet. He attributed this to the question of a trade-off between the sanctuary and Linkhorn and Broad bays.

"What bothers us is we don't think there is a need for the trade-off," Travelstead said. "What we have here is an individual case where because of the sanctuary some crabbers don't have a place to crab. I don't think opening the sanctuary will stop crabbing in Linkhorn and Broad bays. As long as there are crabs in an area there will be fishermen who want to catch them."

Because of legislative deadlines the matter may not be presented to the General Assembly this session, Sanford said the watermen will keep working on the matter until something is done.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said the city feels it is just too late to act on it for this year. But he said they will have until next year to get the word across. Bob Matthias, Inter-Governmental Relations Coordinator for Virginia Beach, said the Virginia Beach General Assembly delegation held similar sentiments.

Bobby Crisher, 5, of Virginia Beach hopes to be a crabber, like his dad, "Bob" someday—that is if there is still a place to crab his father said.

Controversy

Although Jennings made one concession after another, council recently approved a substitute motion proposed by Councilwoman Nancy A. Creech, to wait until the plan being prepared by Harland Bartholomew, the consultant, is completed and to then have the staff investigate the proceedings the city would use if the road was definitely out of the plan.

Following objections from citizens at a public hearing, the consultant said he would take Old Donation Parkway out of the plan. This led to the proposal of the resolution.

Councilman John A. Baum said that he did not think the consultant should make a statement before a large crowd that he wouldn't recommend something. Mayor Harold Hesichober said that the problem is not whether Old Donation Parkway is built or not, but that other communities may in be in the same situation and the problem has to be resolved for all.

Baum attributed the resolution on Old Donation Parkway to the response of the residents. Comparing fundamentalist preachers to Old Donation Parkway area residents, he said, Old Donation takes first place.

"What fundamentalist preachers have to do with this is beyond me," said Jennings.

Jennings pointed out that previous councils voted to remove the road from the highway plan, but kept the right of way. He said that hundreds of property owners have signed petitions asking the city to sell the right of way back to them. He said that it is not a fair shake for the owners of property to live under this uncertainty.

"All I'm trying to do is represent my constituents," Jennings said.

"Council could piecemeal the consultant's plan to death; other residents have concerns," Creech said.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said she recalled that when council took Old Donation off the plan, it demonstrated a conscious decision to retain the right-of-way for possible future needs. The resolution said, however, that the right-of-way would be disposed of, she added.

In 1979 when council took the road off the plan, it did not relinquish the property, Jennings said. "That's the thorn on everybody's side."

Councilman Robert G. Jones said that he could support the resolution if the manager's report came back with the consultant's report.

Jennings agreed to remove one paragraph to satisfy Henley and Jones which implied that the right of way would be disposed of. He also agreed to another change in wording to suit Jones.

Creech made her substitute motion anyway and did not withdraw it when Councilman Louis R. Jones suggested that council support Jennings' resolution with changes so that it was virtually the same as the Creech motion so "we'll all walk away happy." He said that Jennings was trying to get the intent of council to the people in the King's Grant area.

The vote for Creech's motion was 7-4 with Jennings, L. Jones, R. Jones and Councilwoman Meyera Oberdorf dissenting.

The action means that the council will wait until it considers the master plan before deciding what to do about Old Donation rights of way.

ment of Instructional Planning and Development Services be accepted and the texts adopted, they will be used in the schools from July 1, 1986, to June 20, 1992.

All of the books recommended for adoption were proposed by curriculum committees of the individual subject areas, following thorough review of each text by teachers in those subject areas throughout the school division. The curriculum committees, which are comprised of parents, teachers, students, and school administrators, meet on a regular basis during the school year.

State Board of Education procedures for the adoption of textbooks have been strictly followed in the selection of the recommended texts. In each case, the Virginia Beach Public Schools Department of Instructional Planning and Development Services recommends to the School Board the committee's first choice for adoption.

proximately 6 feet tall, 155 pounds, having a mustache, black hair, and brown eyes. He was wearing dirty, dark blue work-type clothing and a brown leather baseball cap.

A cash reward of up to $1,000 will be paid if a call to 427-0000 results in the arrest of this man.

Rewards are also paid for information about wanted persons, stolen property, drugs, or any other crime. Calls are handled confidentially and you don't have to give your name to collect the cash rewards.

Seeking facts on suspect in shooting

The Virginia Beach Crime Solvers program is seeking information that will lead to the arrest of the man responsible for the Nov. 11 shooting of a 56-year-old Virginia Beach resident.

That Monday at 11:40 p.m., the man walked out of his apartment in the 4600 block of Savoy Court in the Pembroke Court Apartments to leave for his job as a security officer. He was in uniform and armed.

As he reached his car, he heard someone yell "Yo Captain." As he started to turn, he was shot in the back by a male assailant.

The victim described the man as a light skinned black male in his mid twenties, 5'9" tall, and a medium build. He has been running towards Ferry Plantation Road.

The motive for this shooting is still unknown.

Crime Solvers asks that anyone with information about this malicious assault call 427-0000.

Callers are eligible for cash rewards of up to $1,000 if an arrest is made based on their information.

Cash is also paid for information leading to the apprehension of wanted persons or the recovery of drugs or stolen property. Callers' names are not required to collect the rewards.

Information sought on sexual assault

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers is looking for information that will lead to an arrest in the Nov. 22, 1985 sexual assault that occurred in the Ocean Park section.

On that Friday morning at 12:30 a.m., a Virginia Beach woman was awakened and assaulted in her town house in the 3700 block of West Stratford Road. During the assault, the woman was able to bite the man inflicting injury to his genitals.

Before leaving through the front door, the assailant struck her several times and knocked her down a flight of stairs.

The man investigators are looking for is black, in his late twenties or early thirties, ap-racial overtones. He said it has implications toward the black athletes who are in school and doing the struggling because of their athletic participation.

Matthews said there needs to be a system where students can achieve academic and athletic success at the same time.

O'Brien's legislation actually is pushing for a system where students can achieve success in both areas.

The opponents of this legislation are not thinking of the students' best interest. Athletics is beneficial and does play a vital role in some student's lives. It should never be allowed to overshadow the importance of receiving a good education.

A student who cannot maintain a 1.6 grade average should be spending more time on academics. Tutoring and other help would be more beneficial to the child than athletics.

Virginia Beach schools abide by the VHSL minimum standard. There is nothing to stop the School Board from passing stricter requirements.

If O'Briens legislation is not passed the School Board should take it upon itself to impose tougher standards.

The welfare of Virginia Beach students must be the priority. They should have the right to the best education possible. If participation in athletics is diminishing their opportunity for a good education then participation should be restricted.—C.M.

Caring for others motivates Keel second was much more joyous than the first."

Keel is very committed to the March of Dimes. He quickly points out the picture of three poster children he has in his office. It sits next to a picture of his wife, Linda and their three children, Christopher, Cheri and Brian.

He finds his current position as telephone chairman for the Tide-water March of Dimes chapter is both exciting and challenging.

The upcoming national telethon in June will mark the third anniversary of the event for the organization. The local chapter participated for the first time last year.

"The telethon is a big involvement and challenge," Keel said. "Having never worked with television before it was a new experience for me. I was involved in everything from production to fundraising. This covered everything from what went on the air down to getting people to donate food to feed the volunteers."

Keel proudly points out that the chapter raised in excess of $80,000 last year, a figure he expects to double this year. Nationally, $13 million was raised last year by the telethon.

Keel stresses that the March of Dimes is the only organization that has found a cure for what it was originally formed for—polio. Since that time the organization has moved into the broader area of fighting birth defects.

"I think the telethon has been very beneficial in letting people know what the organization is all about," he said. "A lot of people remember saving dimes and the polio vaccine. But, I think a lot of people aren't sure what the organization does now. We still provide funds to the Salk Foundation and aid polio victims but we are doing a whole lot more."

Some projects of the March of Dimes, like the polio and rubella vaccines, are very dramatic, Keel said. But he feels some of the less dramatic projects of the organization are also very important.

Chief among these, in Keel's opinion, is educating the public.

The biggest cause of birth defects is low birth weight, babies born too small, too soon, according to Keel. A good percentage of these cases could be prevented with education. "Mothers, be they 15, 25 or even 35, need to be educated about the importance of good pre-natal care," he said. "With the proper care they are more likely to carry their babies full term. This gives them a much better chance of having a healthy baby."

Keel said not a day goes by that he is not doing something that relates to his work with the March of Dimes. If he had to put a figure on it, he would say about 20 percent of his time is devoted to the organization.

When he is not busy working or involved in March of Dimes activities, Keel enjoys snow-skiing, sailing and scuba diving. When he can "find the time and the patience" he likes wood working.

Keel's civic involvement does not end with the March of Dimes. He is active in the Pembroke Kiwanis Club, the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce and River Shore Baptist Church. He is also involved in a number of professional organizations. These include the Financial Managers Society, Institute of Financial Education and the Savings and Loan Institute.

Virginia Beach 4-H volunteer honored as national winner

Blaine Eaton, a Virginia Beach 4-H Adult Volunteer was selected as one of six national winners in the 4-H Wildlife and Fisheries Adult Volunteer Leader Recognition Program.

As part of this recognition he will receive a trip to the 51st North American Wildlife and Natural Resources Conference, March 21-24, 1986, in Reno, Nevada.

At the Conference, Eaton will be recognized as one of the six national winners for 1985 and presented a plaque. He is the continuing sponsor of this 4-H recognition program since 1980 is the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Eaton, 35, is a cardiopulmonary technologist for the U.S. Navy. He has been a herpetologist since he was nine years old. For the past three years he has contributed his knowledge and skills about snakes, wildlife and fisheries to the 4-H Program in Virginia Beach as a Volunteer Leader.

As a 4-H leader he has worked with 4-H members to help them learn and experience wildlife in their natural habitat. This has included many fishing and field trips. His forte is snakes, and consequently, he has done numerous exhibits and lectures on the "Snakes of Virginia" throughout the city, as well as responded to snake calls from local residents.

"I enjoy especially to teach 4-Hers about snakes since people don't really understand snakes," Eaton said. To see the young 4-Hers reaction to the feel of a snake is hard to explain. Most people think snakes are slimy, when actually they are not."

As a 4-H volunteer, he has been involved in various other 4-H activities and events such as building a float, a parade, Christmas caroling, Veterinary science project and contest judge. He says 4-H has helped him have more patience in working with young people. He has a goal of someday organizing a 4-H Wildlife and Fishing Club.

Spain sighting of Air Force flight training

The northern plains of Spain, populated with deer and wild boar, were once the hunting grounds for Spanish kings. Today, the hunting grounds are the skies for Air Force Staff Sgt. Sandra L. Lynch-Maldonado and members of the 406th Tactical Fighter Training Wing, who provide realistic air-to-air and air-to-ground gunnery ranges for American fighter pilots stationed in Europe.

Lynch-Maldonado, daughter of Shirley A. Smith of Virginia Beach, is an administration specialist who lives and works at Zaragoza Air Base. The northern Spanish base is different than most bases because there are no aircraft permanently assigned here. This allows American unit from other countries to use the facility for training. Architect's career built on excellence

Richard Pancoast, director, Engineering and Maintenance Control Division of the Public Works Department (PWD), at Oceana Naval Air Station in Virginia Beach, was filled with fond farewells, a retirement certificate and the presentation of the prestigious Navy Meritorious Civilian Service Medal and accompanying certificate.

Although he started with civil service in 1944, at the Naval Supply Center, Norfolk, Pancoast's career was interrupted in 1945 by active duty Naval service and then a return to college.

Resuming his civil service career in 1948 as an engineering aid for the Army Corps of Engineers, Norfolk, Pancoast received several promotions.

Pancoast transferred to NAS Oceana in 1954 and has become a familiar face since then—instrumental in the building of the station from an outlying field to a master jet base.

Several promotions, including those to architectural engineer and to supervisory architectural engineer, put Pancoast in line for his October 1982 promotion as a supervisory architect, his position before retiring.

Pancoast and his wife Mildred reside in Virginia Beach.

Virginia AFL-CIO announces 1986 agenda for workers

Improving workers' compensation statutes, strengthening unemployment compensation laws and reforming voter registration rights are among the top priorities for labor leaders in the 1986 session of the Virginia General Assembly, according to the Virginia State AFL-CIO.

Along with state elected and local union leaders at news conferences in Roanoke, Richmond and Norfolk, AFL-CIO President David H. Laws detailed an ambitious legislative agenda for the 108,000-member Federation.

"We call upon our new Governor and the General Assembly to take advantage of the opportunities this historic session provides. We are moved, as are many Virginians, by the Governor's hope for a 'New Dominion' and are confident that his vision is that of our own; that its foundations are built soundly upon the principals of justice, compassion and equality of opportunity. A New Dominion for all, not just for a few."

Specifically, the AFL-CIO urged the General Assembly to restore recognition of the many occupational diseases currently not covered by Virginia Workers' Compensation provisions. "The recent Supreme Court decision, Gilliam v. Western Electric, obliterated much of the progress that has been made over the past 30 years in this area," according to Laws. (Tenosynovitis, carpal tunnel syndrome, and hearing loss are examples of diseases no longer covered under current provisions.)

The Federation also urged the Legislature to include gradually incurred injuries as compensable diseases. Numerous other states now recognize such work-related illnesses as back injuries as compensable.

In the area of Unemployment Compensation, the unions want the equation for determining who receives relief expanded so that part time employees who are laid off can be eligible for aid. Current laws, they say, discriminate against lower wage earners and part-time workers and "fail to recognize the reality of Virginia's occupational demographics in the middle 1980's."

The Federation also renewed its call for statewide voter registration characterizing Virginia's current ranking of 46th of 50 states in the percentage of eligible voters on the rolls as "absurd" and "are of the few notable failures of Charles Robb's administration. Statewide registration is feasible this year if Governor Baliles will make it priority."

The Labor leaders also took a firm stand against the anticipated reintroduction of a bill to expand the uses of polygraph machines in employment practices, calling them "unfair" and "unreliable." "What's good enough for George Shultz is good enough for workers," quipped Laws.

Other concerns for labor this year include support for the proposals of the American Federation of Teachers for full funding for the Standards of Quality for public education, support for making Brown Lung disease (Brysonosis) compensable as a work-related illness and lowering the interest rates banks can charge on consumer credit card loans.

Finally, the labor leaders said that they would ask the Legislature to appropriate funding for labor studies center at one of the Commonwealth's public universities. Based on concepts similar to centers located in numerous other states, a labor studies center would provide opportunities for working men and women to study labor law, health and safety courses and labor history.

"We expect a great deal of resistance to this idea obviously," said Laws. "But this will be an ongoing objective for the union movement in Virginia from now on. The men and women who build our roads and bridges, work in the factories and mills, teach our children and make our governments work deserve a place where they can learn about the achievements of the workers who win them the opportunities they enjoy today. A labor studies center will be a source of pride for workers and their unions and an invaluable tool for the academic community."

Laws concluded by acknowledging that while the Federation faces an uphill battle in trying to achieve much of its agenda he said, "the Virginia labor movement has consistently beaten the odds in recent times. The Virginia AFL-CIO has added 50 new affiliates to our base of 400 local unions in the past 18 months. Labor's esteem in the public mind is heightening year after year, reversing the trend of the '60s and '70s according to the national polls. "Eighty-five percent of our endorsed and targeted House of Delegates candidates were successful last November, and our early endorsement of a progressive, longshot for Lieutenant Governor not only has given us important friends in high places, but has effectively destroyed the "labor" myth forever."

1986 is success story for Beach Crime Solvers

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers would like to take this opportunity to share our success story with the many people who have made Crime Solvers the great success that it is.

Each week, Crime Solvers, through local newspapers, radios, and television, highlight an unsolved crime as our "Crime of the Week." These cases are generally of a serious nature and investigators are either at a dead end or need more information to make an arrest.

Since May 3, 1982 when Crime Solvers first began receiving calls, we have solved 47 "Crimes of the Week" including several rapes, robberies, burglaries, and three homicides.

To date, Virginia Beach Crime Solvers has assisted the Virginia Beach Police Department with the arrest of 1030 people. Those arrested have been charged with 2130 crimes ranging from murders to larcenies. Crime Solvers has also assisted in the recovery of $565,465 worth of stolen property and in the confiscation of $932,622 in illegal drugs, over 98 percent of the cases involving Crime Solvers information have been successfully prosecuted.

The Crime Solvers board of directors, composed of citizens from all areas of the community, oversee the operation of the program and provide money for cash rewards to be paid. In our four years of operation $56,335 in rewards have been authorized.

Since the reward fund is totally comprised of tax-deductible contributions from citizens and businesses, we hope our contributors are pleased with the program's success. We also hope our callers will continue to call our 427-0000 telephone number and make 1986 even more successful. Crime Solvers wishes everyone a prosperous New Year.

Be Complete. Put yourself in the reader's place. If you were considering buying this item, what would you want to know about it? Give the item's age, condition, size, brand name and any other important information needed. And don't forget to include the price! Add that list prices will get Classified shoppers' attention first.

Avoid Aberrations. A few aberrations and a few more little abbreviations are OK, but an ad full of them just confuses the reader. They will go on to the next ad rather than trying to decipher yours. A good rule of thumb is: "Spell it out or leave it out."

Be Available. List your telephone number and/or address so that the prospect who knows how to contact you. State the best hours to call. Use a nearby post office home when a potential buyer calls, chances are they will not call back.

Feel free to ask for help, because help is free for the asking and that's what we're here for. Our staff are experienced professionals, and they know the information and action words that will help make the sale. Call 547-4571 for help with your classified ad.

Council amends no-wake ordinance

City Council amended its no-wake ordinance to prohibit wakes "that are capable of causing damage" to other boats or vessels or to bulkheads, piers or shorelines.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that the present city code had no guidelines or criteria for the establishment of no-wake zones.

constructed stub street parks at 13th, 14th and 20th Street and the Norwegian Lady Plaza at 25th Street.

Mike Barrett, assistant to the city manager for resort activities, said that while the program has received no overwhelming support from Oceanfront proprietors, neither has it had overwhelming opposition.

The franchise agreement between the city and the vendor would control the vending units which would be required to be portable, non-motorized carts displaying colorful motif with umbrellas or canopies and "properly attired attendants."

The city would control the size and the area where the unit would operate and would require disposal of litter by the vendor.

A pre-bidder's conference is scheduled at commission headquarters, 302 22nd Street at 10 a.m. March 3.

Operating hours would be from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily except from May 1-22 when the units will be open only on weekends.

A resolution approving the program will be considered by City Council. Tim Barow, commission chairman, said the carts will make an important contribution to the overall resort program. He said council already has approved outdoor cafes which will provide quality service. The carts, he said, will replace the proliferation of vending machines on every corner and offer an opportunity for providing convenient services.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberdorff recalled that approximately 10 years ago a young man working his way through college met resistance from the restaurant interests when he wanted to operate a mobile unit.

She said she did not think there would be any type of conflict with the present businesses.

Police firing range must be relocated

Residential development nearby is forcing the Police Department to relocate its firing range.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck as proposed that the range be relocated from its present site at the foot of Leroy Drive off Seaboard Avenue to the city-owned Crédes airfield.

He said that the cost of relocating the project would be the same as the cost of altering the present range to avoid endangering future residents of the Foxfire project.

The Capital Improvement Budget includes a $272,550 allocation for the changes at the present location which include rotating the 30-position weapons firing range 90 degrees toward undeveloped, city-owned property.

Muehlenbeck pointed out that some of the homes will be built within 100 feet of the range where they will be subject to noise and the possibility of ricocheting ammunition.

Police Chief Charles Wall said the site, which contains 260.04 acres, could also serve other public safety programs such as the K-9 Corps, helicopter operations, and training classes.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that when development started at Foxfire, she knew something would have to be done. She asked that a public hearing be scheduled immediately to explain the project to the area residents. The proposal has possibilities and noted also that the animal control facility in the residential development may also have to be relocated.

Wall said the police would use a maximum of 50 acres.

City releases demographic stats

More than 21,000 persons were added to the population of Virginia Beach in 1985, according to figures just released by the city's Planning Department.

The current total population for Virginia Beach is estimated at 343,200.

The Building Permits Office has also released the latest figures for the number of residential units located in Virginia Beach. More than 7,000 units were added in 1985, bringing the number of housing units to a total of 123,955.

the funds to the school, planned for a site south of Lynhaven Parkway near Indian River Road.

School Superintendent E. E. Brickell told the board that the school system ended up getting $1.57 million more than expected in impact aid funds. Impact aid funds compensate school systems for educating children of federal and military families who work at local non-tax paying facilities.

E. Carlton Bowyer, assistant superintendent for operational services, said nearly all that money would be needed to pay for design changes to Salem High, because of additional demands on the high school curriculum.

City planning second annual play competition

This year's Second Annual One-Act Competition, sponsored by the Virginia Beach Parks and Recreation Department's Performing Arts Unit, includes three original award winning one-act plays from across the country.

Entertainment

"Growin' Pains" tells of a shop owner who takes a protective interest in a teenage boy. Together they learn about loving and living.

This character study will be directed by Shirley Hurd, who was the assistant director in "Richard III" for the 1985 Shakespeare By-The-Sea Festival. Her television and film credits include "Lady MacBeth" for BBC Scotland and CBN's "Another Life."

"A Hall of a Heavenly Time," by Matthew Witten, is a farcical comedy with a dash of "Twilight Zone" atmosphere. The two main characters are dead, and they are trying to decide what to do in their after-lives.

Cameron Dye will direct this comical play. Dye graduated from the University of Virginia with a degree in lighting design and has worked with the Virginia Stage Company as master electrician/lighting designer.

Dye came to work for the Performing Arts Unit in 1980 as lighting designer/production manager, and he directed "Something Blue" in the Kempville Playhouse's 1984 One-Act Competition.

"The Tears of God" centers on the conflict of breaking away from a secure past. This sensitive and touching play reveals the complex relationship between a woman in her thirties and her 70-year-old grandmother.

Robert Nelson will direct this poetic one-act. Nelson is managing director of the Virginia Valley Theatre and has choreographed stage combat and taught acting and makeup workshops in the Virginia Public Schools. He directed "The Pinch Hitter" in the Kempville Playhouse's 1982 One-Act Competition.

Scheduled performance dates are Friday, Jan. 31 and Saturday, Feb. 1 at 8 p.m., and Sunday Feb. 2 at 3 p.m. All three plays will be performed at each showing and will be held at the Kempville Playhouse.

Plays may contain subject matter not suitable for young audience members.

Admission is free and reservations are not required. Large groups (10 or more) may want to call ahead.

Henley unhappy with legislation

Pungo Councilwoman Barbara Henley asked the city staff to closely follow the progress of the bill being introduced in the General Assembly that would allow mobile homes in agriculturally-zoned land prohibiting regulation by the local government. She also suggested that council adopt a resolution protesting the proposed legislation.

Mobile vending may be permitted

For the first time this summer the city may permit mobile vending units at the resort strip.

Bathers and pedestrians would have easy access to snacks, such as New York sausages, ice cream, candy and ices from the units which are being proposed by the Resort Area Advisory Commission (RAAC) to contribute to the festive spirit of the oceanfront.

RAAC has suggested four units be permitted on an experimental basis this summer from May 1 through Sept. 15, one each at the newly-

All classes take place on Saturdays in February and March at the Arts Center's studios. Children sign up for a month of ArtSaturdays at a cost of $25 per child, which includes all materials. The hours are 10:30 a.m. to noon for children ages seven to nine; noon to 2 p.m. for children ages 10 to 12.

Language barriers borken in ESL

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

Reading street signs or taking a trip to the grocery store does not present a challenge for most Virginian Beach residents. For non-English speaking members of the community, however, these tasks can be a major ordeal.

"I think you are only able to learn a language by being in the country," Christiane Thomaschki said. "In school in Germany I studied English and my grade would be comparable to a B. I thought I would be able to speak a little bit of English when I got here. I got to the immigration office in New York. I was overwhelmed."

Thomaschki, who came here to spend a year with her aunt, said she came with the intention of improving her English. She considered attending a local college, but really wanted something less expensive. Then she discovered the English-as-a-Second-Language program (ESL) offered by the Adult Learning Center

(A.L.C.) of Virginia Beach Public Schools.

Thomaschki enrolled in the program in September. She said she is very impressed with the program and that her English has greatly improved.

"I am very happy; seriously I really like the school system and the teaching atmosphere," Thomaschki said. "There is not a lot of stress here. It is, how do you say it, a leisure atmosphere. It has helped improve my English very much. It is a chance four hours a day to speak only English. We have to because we (the students) are all from different countries."

There are four "Rs" in the ESL program—reading, writing, listening and speaking. They are dealt with at each of the four skill levels, according to Margaret Kierman, a teacher in the program.

Students who are lacking in one or all of these skills are placed in Level I. Some may only

Residents angered by realignment

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Residents of Indian River Road packed City Council chambers, but most left disappointed, some angry, over the realignment of the road finally adopted by council.

The 7.4 decision of council means that two residents will lose their homes and others will lose the greater portion of their front yards.

What the residents resented most was that after considering various plans since June of last year, council approved one that was revealed to the public only last Thursday.

The plan, however, is actually a combination of the others.

"We spend six months and they come up with a hybrid with no discussion," said Marie Dill, of the 4200 block of Elbow Road. Dill's home will not be affected. She was accompanying her neighbor, Evelyn W. Clark, also of the 4200 block of Elbow Road, whose property will be affected.

Beach students put on their dancing shoes

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

"Great, terrific, overwhelmed, privileged and all the great words you can think of," is how 14-year-old dancers, Kel Breslin and Juan "Tony" Moore described their opportunity to study and dance with professional dancers Nancy Thuesen, with the Dennis Wayne Dancers and Kenneth Hughes, formerly with the American Ballet Theatre.

The Virginia Beach youths are members of the newly reformed dance troupe, Music in Motion of Virginia. The company's first official performance will be at the Pavilion on Saturday, Feb. 1 at 8 p.m.

Music in Motion is a national organization with seven companies throughout the United States. It is open to dancers ages eight to 18. The concept of the organization is to provide quality instruction for dance students where they live.

Music in Motion was originated in Virginia Beach in 1965 or 1966 by Barbara Thuesen, who now runs a chapter in New York. All of the other Music in Motion companies are run by her former students.

Thuesen, who is a professional dancer and choreographer, said what inspired her to form the group was the fact that students who were serious about studying dance often couldn't find good professional training where they lived. This meant that to study dance the students were forced to leave home to study in large dance centers like New York.

"I was faced with the situation myself," Thuesen said. "My daughter, Nancy, wanted to be a dancer. My husband was stationed here in Virginia Beach, so we couldn't pick up the family and move to New York where she would have good teachers. Nor did I want to send her off on her own and I couldn't leave my husband and son to go with her."

Thuesen's solution to the problem was to form her own company. Thus Music in Motion was born.

More revising planned for Conflict of Interest ordinance

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Final adoption of a Conflict of Interest ordinance for Virginia Beach has been postponed for at least six weeks.

The time is to be used to evaluate three proposals, condensing them into one document for City Council's consideration.

The proposals include:

- The ordinance presented by the Ethics Committee.
- That same ordinance with changes proposed by City Attorney Dale Bimson's Office.

Under a motion approved unanimously by City Council after a three-hour discussion, the Ethics Committee was requested to study the ordinances and to present a single version by the end of the two weeks. At that time, a committee composed of two council members will be given the ordinance to study for possible changes, and allowing time for study by council, the ordinance should be back on the council agenda within 30 days.

Speakers before council requested a deferral because of the brief time (a few days at most) they had to consider the city attorney's changes.

Disagreement over the city attorney's changes was directed chiefly at:

- The deletion of a section on standards of ethical conduct which was described by Bimson as being "vague, overbroad and unenforceable."

Suite A-104—a place Jaycees now call home

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

The Virginia Beach Jaycees finally have a place they can call home.

For the past seven or eight years the organization has rented meeting and office space in the Pembroke Manor Civic Center. It was their's to use for meetings two nights a week. They were also provided with a small office space where they "could store their goodies," according to Mark Roth, Jaycee president.

The new meeting house/office, Suite A-104 in the Holland Commerce Park Complex, 468 S. Independence Blvd., is the Jaycees' to use 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

A grand opening celebration is planned for Tuesday, Feb. 25.

Roth said that Michael Katsias and R. G. Moore have been instrumental in helping the organization obtain the meeting place.

He feels that having a place at their disposal all the time will help the chapter to function more like a business. With 220 members, communication can be a problem, Roth said. He feels the central location will help improve this and other aspects of the organization.

One of the first tasks for the Jaycees, upon settling in, will be to modernize their record keeping and mailings, according to Roth. A computer donated by Vansant & Geisler Co. and a photo-copier from the M. Katsias Realty Co. will aid them in updating their roster and other projects.

"An organization as large as ours in a city the size of Virginia Beach needs a meeting place of its own to better serve the members and the community," Roth said. "It will definitely improve communication between the members and raise the image of the organization in the eyes of the community. I think a bright, new atmosphere will also serve as an inspiration to the members."

While the rent is a little higher for the new office than it was in the civic center, Roth said the value of what they are getting is much greater.

The goal of the Jaycees, which is open to men and women between the ages of 18 and 36, is to provide leadership training and community development. The organization uses a triangle concept, Roth said. The sides of the triangle are the areas of development—individual, community and management. In the center of the triangle are the members.

"The reason for cutting off membership at age 36 is to give young people a chance to gain

Law trades conflicts

The proposed conflict-of-interest law in Virginia Beach could create another set of conflicts for several City Council members.

The proposed ethics law would require City Council members to disclose annually the names of clients or customers to whom they sell services of more than $10,000 or materials of more than $30,000.

They would also have to disclose the names of clients or customers from who they received fees or commissions of more than $250 if that client or customer appears before council.

But certain professions like lawyers, dentists, bankers and funeral directors, all of which are represented on council, are bound by professional codes of ethics that require confidentiality of patient or client records.

Faced with this situation, what should a council member do? Break—a client's confidence or withhold information from the public?

Some claim that such disclosures are vital to ethics law. That, for example, the identification of major clients of lawyers is especially important because of the ease with which the interest of one's clients can be confused with public interest.

They contend further that the names of clients could be disclosed without breaching confidence as long as the substance of the communication remains confidential.

If the council member or the professional association he belongs to doesn't view disclosure in this manner, what should he do?

Some may say that if the members cannot resolve their private and public conflicts then they should not serve on council. On the surface this argument appears quite valid, but what if it results in the lack of competent candidates for council? Is the public's best interest really being served?

Another way to resolve the conflict would be to hire full-time council members.

Take for example, Montgomery County, Maryland, which has a similar conflict-of-interest law. The seven-member council is full-time. They are paid $35,000 per year.

Virginia Beach council members are part-time and make $15,000 per year. If Virginia Beach chose to switch to a full-time council and paid them $35,000 per year it would cost the city an additional $220,000 per year.

Aside from financial considerations, another question is whether Virginia Beach really needs full-time council members. Montgomery County is about twice as large as Virginia Beach in population.

The conflict-of-interest ordinance in Virginia Beach was sent back to the Mayor's Ethics Committee, which wrote the proposal, for amendments.

Among the changes recommended is a requirement that officials let a standing ethics committee decide when professional confidentiality takes precedence over public disclosure.

Hopefully the committee can resolve this issue in a manner that will serve both the council members' professional ethical standards and the public's right to know.

The ethics law needs to be accurate, but it also needs to be implemented. Delays serve no one's best interest.—C.M.

An end to vending machines

Hopefully two ordinances recently passed by the Virginia Beach City Council will decrease the number of vending machines in the beach area.

The gaudy machines that eat money and attract bees and trash are an eyesore.

One ordinance permits mobile vendors at four city street corners, at 13th, 14th, 20th and 25th streets. They will operate under a franchise agreement with the city.

The franchise agreement will control the vending units which would be required to be portable, non-motorized carts displaying colorful motifs with umbrellas or canopies.

These brightly colored carts will be a definite improvement over the existing vending machines.

Tim Barrow, chairman of the Resort Area Advisory Commission, which proposed the ordinance, said the carts will replace the proliferation of vending machines on every corner.

The city would control the size and area where the units would operate and require disposal of litter by the vendor.

The other ordinance permits beachgoers to carry their own food and drinks to the beach, as long as the containers are not glass and the drinks are non-alcoholic.

As long as litter regulations are enforced, this ordinance will also help improve the area.

Add to these the addition of outdoor cafes along the boardwalk and the atmosphere presented to residents and tourists alike, will be a gala one.—C.M.

Officers elected for Medical Society

Another view of budget law

"The VA's ability to continue providing minimally acceptable levels of health care and services for disabled veterans are in jeopardy as a result of budget cuts mandated by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget law," warned Albert H. Linden, National Commander of the disabled American Veterans (DAV).

War, said the DAV's particularly concerned about the plan to cut more than $8.1 million in medical and prosthetic research funds.

The cuts average 4.3 percent across-the-board for the VA, except for direct medical care, which was limited by law to a 1-percent reduction.

"That's almost $85 million taken from a system that is already turning away more than 25,000 veterans a month from their doors. Veterans who need help and can't get it elsewhere," Linden said.

The former Army helicopter pilot emphasized that disabled veterans, in particular, are committed to making whatever sacrifices are necessary to fairly and equitably reduce the nation's growing federal deficit. "But it's not a fair and equitable solution when you jeopardize programs that are badly needed by men and women who've already paid a far greater price for all of us in America."

Commentary

As a result of the sequestering provisions of the law, recently implemented by President Reagan, the Veterans Administration (VA), will lose more than $234 million in budget authority funding and over $196 million in budget outlays during fiscal year 1986. Major cuts in such areas as hospital construction and readjustment benefits for veterans jeopardize programs that have already been pared to the bare bones. In the case of the VA's construction program, the cuts mean badly deteriorating facilities—that have already gone too long without replacement or modernization—will have to wait that much longer.

Linden, who leads the organization of more than one million war-time disabled veterans, said the cuts fly in the face of Congressional promises to maintain quality health care for America's disabled veterans.

"Almost $40 million in budget cuts for readjustment benefits will mean men and women who served during our nation's wars, primarily Vietnam vets, may not get all the assistance they need to return to society as working, productive members."

Certain educational benefits may be in jeopardy as well. The DAV questions how severely hurt may be young veterans who've counted on continuing their education after service.

In addition, the VA's administrative systems—the processing of disability claims, program applications and services—are all threatened by cuts such as a $2 million reduction in general operating expenses, a $2.3 million cut in medical administration costs and a $5.8 million cut in burial benefits and miscellaneous operating expenses.

Linden, who is a single-leg amputee veteran of the Vietnam

Time for economic summit?

By Rep. Norman Slitsky
Last November, President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev met in Geneva to begin serious discussions on arms control and other pressing international problems.

These discussions are vital to our mutual understanding and to world peace.

We will still have our difficulties with the Soviet Union, but at least our leaders have taken that first important step.

At home, we are facing serious economic problems that are just as critical to our country's future and will take the same concentration to effort to resolve.

I think the time is right for President Reagan and the leaders of both the House and Senate to put aside partisan bickering and start serious discussions on how to resolve our budget and deficit difficulties.

I have written to the President, House Speaker Tip O'Neill and Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole urging them to convene a domestic economic summit conference as soon as possible.

This is an extraordinary request, but the long-term economic problems we face are very disturbing, and within months we must make some critical and hard decisions about our domestic and national defense priorities.

In the closing hours of the 1985 session, Congress passed and the President signed into law the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction plan—a law that could fundamentally alter the budget process and establish a new, and uncertain balance between the President and the Congress.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings also has a built-in budget cutting mechanism that goes into effect automatically unless the

The uncertainty of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings itself is a compelling reason for a domestic summit conference.

Over the past several years our federal budget deficit has reached record levels.

This deficit inhibits capital formation, makes America dependent on foreign capital, drives up the value of the dollar and puts us at a disadvantage in the world market.

What's more, every year we must pay more interest on our debt and that means there is less left over for our important domestic programs and our vital national security.

If we are going to solve our long-term economic problems, the administration and the Congress must cooperate closely.

We have to put aside the pettiness that often keeps the House from working effectively with the Senate, and that keeps the President from working closely with the Congress.

There's no room for political posturing. All of us must accept our responsibility to the American people.

The stakes are enormous and the longer we put off our problems, the greater they will become. A domestic summit conference will not be a cure-all and we cannot naively expect to resolve all our economic problems by convening one.

But if the President and the leaders of Congress can hammer out an agreement that seriously confronts our deficit crisis while protecting vital domestic programs and our national security, we will have taken a major step in the right direction.

Facing language barriers

By Cheryl Martin
Staff Writer

While the subjects of the conversations are ordinary—one woman is having trouble with her son and the other parents all sympathize, another group is discussing household repairs—something may appear a bit unusual to the uninformed observer.

Many of the students speak with heavy foreign accents representing most parts of the world. The majority of the conversations are in English but occasionally a foreign tongue can be heard. It starts innocently, when a speaker can't think of the right word to express an idea in English. Then absentmindedly, the group slips into speaking in a more familiar language.

These Virginia Beach students are enrolled in the English-as-a-Second-Language program offered by the Virginia Beach Public Schools Adult Learning Center.

While their reasons for being in the United States are as varied as the people themselves—some are the wives of American servicemen, others are students just visiting here, and others still are refugees trying to start new lives for themselves—they share a common bond: Learning to communicate in English is important.

These students' dedication has to be admired. They are not school age children, but adults who must readjust to studying along with learning a new language. Many are also faced with reality of having to survive in a new environment and also support their families.

The language barrier can also be a problem for them in finding jobs. A number of the students attend class and work fulltime.

"I was fortunate enough to recently meet and talk with some of these students. Very impressive with their meticulous attention to detail.

In speaking with me, they tried very hard to understand my questions. When giving their answers they chose their words carefully in order to properly convey their feelings.

Because of the size of our country, many Americans never have to face the problem of language barriers. We take it for granted that everyone can understand us.

Thinking back on a trip to Mexico, I could relate to some of the difficulties these people face. My Spanish is almost nonexistent, so I was very dependent upon a traveling companion who spoke fluent Spanish. When he was off with other members of our group I was faced with not being able to communicate with the people around me, or trying to search out those who happened to speak English.

It is a very strange feeling being surrounded by people and not being able to understand what they are saying or make them comprehend what you are saying.

Imagine leaving all that is familiar and dear to you forever and starting over somewhere new. Not just another town or state, but a place where you can not speak the language and were unfamiliar with the customs of the people. Ordinary tasks like going to the grocery store or filling out applications could become major ordeals.

LET'S TALK

By Gary Blumenthal, president, Virginia Beach Education Association

Why teachers are leery of merit-pay system

business leaders, a PTA representative, building principals, and central office administrators with representatives of the Office of Personnel Services and the Virginia Beach Education Association serving as resource persons.

The commission worked for over a year and recommended a three step plan. Based upon experience, teachers could be eligible for one of three supplements if they exhibited "distinguished" teaching and were involved in a number of professional growth activities. The amounts suggested were: $1,500, $3,000, and $4,500.

The commission established the following tenets for an incentive pay plan:
 • Each teacher will have an equal opportunity to participate in the incentive pay plan.
 • Incentives for outstanding teachers who participate in the plan will be in addition to the provisions for a solid and responsible salary schedule.
 • The plan must be administratively feasible.

• The evaluation process will be objective, impartial, and consistent. Evaluators will be provided sufficient staff development to apply assessment and evaluation consistent with the evaluation process.
 • The plan must be explained to all employees at its inception and reviewed on a regular basis.
 • The plan should be reviewed on a regular basis to determine if it is meeting its goals and objectives.

• The appeals procedure for resolving disputes, if any should arise, will be the same as the current policy until the procedure can be studied to determine if any revisions are necessary.

The commission left the definition of "distinguished" teaching up to the school system. Consequently, the proposed plan was put on hold until a new evaluation program could be developed to consistently, and impartially, determine which teachers could be rated as distinguished. The evaluation committee has been heard at work for over a year.

At this point in time, an evaluation system is being piloted by school principals and teacher evaluators in each school. All participants will be asked to evaluate the evaluation program to determine its effectiveness. One of the key questions that is being asked is, should the new evaluation program be used to determine merit pay?

Many of the administrators and teachers who worked so hard to come up with the new evaluation program will not be surprised if a large number of the administrators and teachers currently piloting the program say that the process might very well help teachers improve their teaching but should not be used as a basis for determining who should be considered distinguished and who should not.

The lesson being learned in Virginia Beach is not unique. Merit pay is not being shunned because teachers blindly refuse to entertain the notion that top performers should not be well compensated. The fact of the matter is that a merit pay plan, that is well conceived and relatively impartial, demands too much time and administrative effort considering the limited impact it has on motivating teachers to become more proficient in the classroom. Money is not the ultimate driver of teachers.

More and more research is indicating that the factors that motivate top teachers to remain in teaching and encourage all teachers to strive for perfection have to do with a reward system that goes beyond salary. For example, one of the most rewarding experiences of teaching is having the principal come by the room and tell teacher he is doing a good job.

If Virginia Beach ultimately decides to forego expansion of the current merit pay program, all will not be lost in the city. There are still many ways to motivate teachers to continue to reach for excellence.

Virginia Beach Newsweek in Review

The following is a list of some of the major news stories affecting Virginia Beach during the last week.

Police and students say buckle up now

State police are enlisting the aid of high school students in Virginia Beach and throughout South Hampton Roads to spread the message of "Buckle Up."

The project is called a "safetython," and its goal is to get more motorists to make the seat belt part of their driving routine. Police say that just a one percent increase in seat belt use would save 900 lives next year.

To promote voluntary seat belt use, state police are using a method similar to that used in walk-a-thons and other events. The students get sponsors to sign up. Each sponsor pledges to buckle up for the next 30 days.

Sheriff instituting fitness program

Sheriff Bill Overman said he will institute a physical fitness requirement for the department's employees within the next month. The fitness requirements are part of Overman's sweeping plan to rejuvenate the department and transform it into a more active law enforcement agency.

Overman has criticized the department's lax training of deputies. He said the department, which has discouraged its employees from pursuing law enforcement, has been content to simply manage the jail and appear in courtrooms.

Humane Society stops Fish Bowl

Lynnhaven Dive Center, in Lynnhaven Beach, abandoned its plans for a fourth "Goldfish Bowl" after animal lovers protested and city officials threatened to lodge criminal charges.

For the past three years, the center has dumped 1,000 goldfish into its pool and offered prizes to the people who captured the most. Last year, about 50 people competed.

Elizabeth Sills, a former president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, read about the event in the newspaper. Outraged, she called the city's animal control superintendent, William H. Clark.

Clark said he discussed the dispute with city attorneys. Under state law, the dive center could be charged with cruelty to animals. It could also be charged with violating a prohibition against using vertebrate animals as prizes or inducements.

The two misdemeanors carry a combined maximum sentence of $1,100 in fines and a year in jail.

Jennings angered by dredging halt

The sudden halt in dredging at Rudee Inlet, has upset Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. He charged that partisan politics is threatening access to the ocean fishing grounds.

Jennings, whose Lynnhaven Borough includes the inlet, said the Virginia Beach Erosion Commission has failed to maintain the inlet. He contended they were "behaving rather childishly."

The commission, whose job under state law is maintaining the resort beach north of the inlet, pumps sand to the beach from the navigation channel by dredging that is supposed to continue 24 hours a day. The constant dredging is needed to keep the channel open for the large fleet of recreation and fishing boats that depend on it.

The commissioners, who are appointed by the governor, removed their dredges from the inlet, they said, to protect their employees who work on the battered boats.

The decision came in the wake of recent criticism of their work by city officials and fishing boat captains.

School population continues to grow

Reviewing school population projections for next year, Deputy Superintendent E. Bruce McGuire said at the recent School Board meeting that Green Run High School, unlike the elementary schools in its zone, will get no relief from already crowded conditions.

The school, with a capacity listed as 2,000 students, had a population of 2,677 students in the last count, taken just before Christmas. Already the most populous senior high in Virginia, the number of students at Green Run may top 3,000 next year.

McGuire predicted that the school system would once again set a record for growth, jumping by more than 2,000 students to a total of 62,000, when school starts Sept. 2. Most of the increase, he said, will be in the lower elementary grades as young families moving to South Hampton Roads continue to buy their first homes in Virginia Beach's new developments.

The board also received school administrators' proposals for school boundary shifts that would affect more than 4,000 elementary and junior high students, mostly to supply students for the opening of Birdeck and Rosemont Forest elementary schools, but also to make room for more elementary students in the Bayside area.

A public hearing on the boundary changes is scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 4 at 7 p.m. in the auditorium of Princess Anne High School. The changes are scheduled for adoption by the board at its Feb. 18 meeting.

Critics contemplate farming council ticket

Five outspoken critics of the city's growth policies are considering running as a ticket in the City Council election. Formation of the ticket, called the "Team for Responsible Leadership," would attempt to wrest control of the council away from the majority that often lines up with developers in rezoning matters.

The ticket would include Nancy Parker, a Planning Commission member who would run for an at-large seat; Walter Vargo, a former president of the Council of Civic Organizations; H. S. Myers, a one-time unsuccessful council candidate and CO board member; John Moss, a member of the Citizens Action Coalition; and John L. Perry, a former member of the Citizens Advisory Committee.

The ticket would compete for all six open council spots, except the Pungo seat held by Barbara M. Henley, whose re-election they support.

Although no decision has been made on whether to run, group members say it appears likely that the ticket will enter into the race.

A recent poll conducted and released by the Virginia Pilot/Ledger Star confirms that a majority of the public would like to see raises for teachers based upon merit. In this poll, 59 percent said they favor a merit system making a teacher's pay level and all raises based on performance.

Nearly all polls on merit pay for teachers have shown similar results since major school recommendations started being released in the last three years. If the public wants merit pay for teachers, why have most school boards across the nation continued with salary systems that grant a general increase to all teachers and a step increase for teachers who have maintained at least satisfactory performance the previous year?

The answer, like so many other popular ideas, is that merit pay for teachers in practice is not as simple as it sounds in theory. The Virginia Beach City Public Schools for example have had a form of merit pay since 1975. The plan, now in effect for over 10 years, was designed to compensate teachers with over 10 years experience who have commendable evaluations and involve themselves in extensive professional involvement and development.

At least 700 of the system's 3,000 teachers have applied and are receiving $800 for their efforts. This program can be implemented administratively and is generally accepted by teachers.

The one general criticism of the program is that it seems to stress accomplishments outside of the classroom and does not stress classroom performance or excellent teaching.

In November 1983, Dr. E. E. Brickell, division superintendent, formed an Incentive Pay Commission whose purpose was to develop a plan that would recognize and reward outstanding teachers. The commission was composed of teachers,

How construction damaged trees can be helped for, spotting construction damage on a lot can be easy. Soil compaction and root damage can be detected by looking at the tree's crown. One sign is branches that don't leaf out fully. Another is branches die back from the top of the tree. Sprouting along the trunk of the tree is still another response to stress.

Look for soil disturbance in the yard where utility crews have been. If the disturbance is under the area shaded by tree, there is a good chance that roots have been cut or damaged.

Look at the lawn for signs. If new grass growth is poor or if there are bare spots, there is probably some soil compaction. The effects of soil compaction and root cutting may not show up immediately. Often the problems caused by construction damage don't appear serious until a year or two later.

Several steps can be taken to help trees recover from construction damage. Root cutting has deprived the tree of water, so starting a regular watering program is a must. This is especially important in July and August when high temperatures put all trees under stress.

Using an auger or a long spike, punch holes in the soil to a depth of 18 inches under the tree's crown. This will increase air and water penetration to roots. These holes can also be used to add fertilizer to the soil.

If construction is still ongoing, put up protective barriers to protect the root system and trunk from equipment damage.

If the tree's top or lateral branches are dying back, they may need trimming and thinning by a professional tree service. These professionals can also top trees if root damage is severe.

Topping should be slight, however, to avoid ruining the aesthetic quality of the tree. When selecting a tree service, do so with care. A future article will discuss this in detail.

The Division of Forestry will be happy to provide advice to residents who think they have construction damaged trees. The Division can be reached at 488-1921.

Maynard is thorough in describing the negative aspects of day care centers, nannies and family care situations, while minimizing the positive. Whether or not the reader shares the author's belief that your children are drastically affected by substitute care, the descriptions of available day care options are informative. Most parents want to consider the minuses of any choice and Maynard does examine those problems.

Representing a somewhat different perspective is well known pediatrician T. Berry Brazelton. His latest book, Working and Caring, accepts the trend that many mothers are not staying home with their pre-schoolers, even when family finances permit.

Brazelton follows three families—a professional couple, a single mother and a blue collar couple—through their pregnancies, the mothers' return to work and the babies' progress to toddler stage.

His concern for the children involved is apparent as his feelings for their parents as he discusses the usual crises and sense of guilt carried by mothers. Brazelton's common sense advice reflects his years of experience and his non-judgmental approach will be appreciated by parents who are often defensive because they are not a "traditional family."

The Child Care Crisis will be helpful to those who need to investigate child care options and the reader should not allow Maynard's value statements to overshadow its facts and worthwhile cautions.

Working and Caring can help employed parents feel good about raising their children at the same time. As Brazelton writes, "The ultimate reward is when your children grow into balanced, flourishing individuals who identify with both sides of you—the working and caring."

Trees

By Paul F. Revell
 Staff Forester

The Division of Forestry frequently gets calls from residents of newly constructed homes in Virginia Beach concerning the poor condition of the trees on their lots.

The trees on sites under construction or where construction has recently been completed are under a variety of stresses. These stresses may kill the trees unless steps are taken to help them.

Due to the rapid growth and resultant construction boom in Virginia Beach, many trees in the city are suffering from construction related problems. Construction damage can result from several causes. Bark abrasion, soil compaction, and root cutting are the three biggest killers of trees on construction sites.

Bark abrasion usually results from bulldozers hitting the trees during land clearing. The resultant wound lets in infection much as a cut or abrasion would on a person.

Soil compaction is caused by frequent machine or foot traffic within the trees' root zone. The piling of construction materials under or against trees also causes compaction.

Root cutting results when grades are lowered or when various underground utility lines are installed.

Bank of Tidewater begins construction

When Bank of Tidewater awarded the construction contract for its permanent headquarters building in Virginia Beach to contractor L. J. Hoy, it was celebrated as a most significant milestone in the development of the institution.

The two-story, 17,000-square-foot building will cost $1.2 million. The architectural firm of Waller and Todd designed the facility to house banking services and administrative offices.

The bank's temporary offices are at 612 Nevan Rd. in Hilltop. Bank of Tidewater has been in operation since July. Original projections for the financial institution have been surpassed.

Business

"Our new building, located in Hilltop on Laskin Road, is very significant to Bank of Tidewater's image and commitment to the city," J. Burton Harrison, president, said. "When we move to the new facility next September, we will demonstrate a permanence that people expect to see in their banks."

Larry Harcum, vice president and chief operations officer, will oversee construction of the building. He and Betsy Duke, vice president and chief financial officer, are in the process of reviewing sites and planning additional branch locations throughout Virginia Beach.

Wheat, First Securities to sponsor stock market seminar in the Virginia Beach Plaza-Hotel on Bonney Road.

Don R. Hays, nationally recognized investment strategist for Wheat, will speak on "The Stock Market: Boom or Bust?" The seminar is free and open to the public.

Hays, senior vice president and director of investment strategy joined Wheat in the fall of 1984. In this position he provides stock market forecasting, industry group analysis and individual stock recommendations for the institutional and public clients of the firm.

Since his arrival at Wheat, he has been proclaiming his thesis that the stock market was in the initial stages of a long-term secular advance.

In retrospect, his projection proved to be on target; the stock market responded in 1985 with a 330 point (28 percent) advance by the Dow Jones Industrial Average.

The Tidewater Chapter of the March of Dimes is sponsoring a "Jail and Bail" fundraiser on Thursday, Jan. 30 and Friday, Jan. 31 at Lynnhaven Mall in Virginia Beach.

the jailbird must post a minimum of $100 bail.

Participants can let the March of Dimes know, by way of an "arrest warrant," if there is someone they want jailed. The chapter will send a uniformed police officer to make the arrest. The culprit will be placed in a mock jail in the center court of the mall.

Once jailed, participants will be allowed as many phone calls as necessary to raise bail.

Advance registration is a must for the event, and March of Dimes officials suggest that the person being arrested "be of good humor." It might be a good idea to inform the arrestee of the plan, but keep the time and day a secret. Jailbirds will be freed after an hour.

Local navyman's work keeps world prepared

By Rick Wilson

Within the Navy there's a group of people whose whereabouts and activities are virtually unknown. Often mistaken as being part of the chaplain corps because of the acronym given them—NAVCHAPGRU—are the men and women who are the Navy's only combat stevedores, the Navy Cargo Handling and Port Group.

Military

Navyman Ronald Weber, son-in-law of Marc and Fanusia Segall of Virginia Beach, is one of the few serving in this unique group. He is a boatswain's mate stationed with the cargo handlers, who are headquartered in Williamsburg.

"I like this job and I feel it's very important," Weber, petty officer first class, said. "I enjoy going out on the deployments and I especially like the temporary duty assignments conducting crane courses at commands.

He works in the training department conducting basic and advanced cargo handling classes. Weber also supervises the loading and unloading of cargo. They load cargo to be stationed throughout the world for use in emergency situations.

Everyone reporting to Weber's command must be trained in basic cargo handling. To accomplish this, the group trains constantly when not actually loading or unloading cargo.

NAVCHAPGRU also trains people from other naval activities in cargo handling skills.

They provide advisory and training support in winch operations and advanced cargo handling to 12 Naval Reserve cargo handling battalions. During a national emergency, the reserves could be recalled to expand the command's staffing, normally 170 people to 1,800.

In peacetime, NAVCHAPGRU deploys its people to areas around the world to load and unload cargo from ships. It also deploys to remote sites such as the island of Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean, and annually sends a detachment to the Antarctic.

Weber said he's glad to be a part of the group because they travel a lot and travel is one of the reasons he joined the Navy. He was also familiar with military life because several members of his family had served in one branch or another.

"My family is basically a military family," Weber, an 11-year sea service veteran, said. "My father is a veteran of the Korean War and my grandfather is a World War II veteran. I also have four cousins who served in Vietnam."

Weber has no regrets with his decision to join the Navy. He says he's matured and learned to handle responsibility. He enjoys his job and the travel involved in spite of the occasional separation from his wife, Mary.

"I have to prepare my wife for the separations," the 6-foot-3-inch-tall Weber said. "I give her enough notice to gear up for the fact that I'll be gone for awhile." Although the separations are difficult, Weber has no intention of giving up the Navy. His plans have been the same since he enlisted—to stay in the Navy at least 20 years.

Rick Wilson is a Navy journalist serving with the Navy Public Affairs Center in Norfolk.

be able to communicate with facial gestures.

"This can be a real challenge for the teachers because the students all speak different languages," R. L. Clark, adult education specialist, said. "We counted once and there were something like 27 different countries and about 20 languages represented. Of course, these figures are always changing as students come and go."

At Level I all four of the basic skills are dealt with simultaneously, Kierman said. In the higher levels, as the students' skills improve time can be spent on individual skills.

Because the teachers cannot converse with the students in their native languages much of the teaching is done with visual aids.

"In Level I it is best to start with body parts: hands, feet, legs, face, then move to the students in the learning process.

When students first enter the program they are given an oral and a written test. This aids in determining at which level they should enter. They are also tested to move up to higher levels.

"Listening can take a student in a level a little longer," Kierman said. "This is because it is a skill they need to develop most: hearing and understanding what they have heard. If they don't comprehend what they are hearing they can't take notes."

The ESL program is constantly being revised and upgraded to better meet the needs of the students, James Dardent, adult education administrator, said. Many of the exercises used in the classes are designed by the teachers.

New courses

New this year is a creative writing and American literature lecture on these subjects.

"Some of our students, for example, are very frightened of the police," Kierman said. "This is because in their own country the police often mean trouble. They don't understand that when a police officer speaks to them he may just be being friendly or only wants information."

Meeting members of the local police department could help to dispel this fear, she added.

For students in Level IV learning to speak English like Americans do is one of their goals. Some studied English in their own countries, but what they learned was British English. This is very different from the English Americans speak, Kierman said.

"We are learning to speak every day English, like Americans," Thomaschki said. "We learn the idioms and everything, which is what I wanted."

For Maria Cartagena the idioms are very confusing.

"I find the idioms very confusing," she said. "My stepchildren will say something is bad, but they mean it is very good. Sometimes I just don't understand."

Cartagena, whose husband is stationed here with the Navy, is from Puerto Rico. She is hoping to develop her English to the point where she can return to teaching, as she did in her homeland.

ESL classes are offered both during the day and in the evening. For many of the students the classes are a family affair. Husbands and wives or parents and children, sometimes whole families enroll in the classes together.

Many, like a father and son from China, attend classes in the morning and then go straight to their jobs. Learning to speak English is very important to them.

ESL classes are offered at A.L.C. 4722 Jericho Rd. Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and on Tuesday and Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m.

Starting this week adult education is offering classes at two new locations, Plaza and Brandon Junior High Schools. ESL will be offered at these sites. It meets at Plaza Junior High on Tuesday and Thursday and at Brandon on Monday and Wednesday. Both classes are from 7 to 9 p.m.

Adult Education courses are offered at seven locations in Virginia Beach. The courses range from adult basic education to computer classes to crafts. Information on classes is available at A.L.C. and all city libraries.

Put on their dancing shoes aids the students greatly in learning their trade. Professional choreographers and dancers are often brought in to work with the students. The directors of the various Music in Motion companies also travel to work with students in other locations.

Currently Thuesen and her daughter Nancy, who also runs an affiliate company in Kentucky, are here working the Virginia Beach students for their upcoming performance.

Thuesen said that having them work with the professionals, helps the students to better understand the profession they are considering. The companies have high standards and all members must audition to join the group. As a prerequisite students must have completed at least one year of classical ballet.

Performances also put high demands on the students. For example, when the students recently had two days off from school, both days they were in the studio from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. for rehearsals. This is in addition to their regular dance classes in the evening.

Christy Montuoro, 12, of Virginia Beach says the upcoming performance has created a hectic schedule for her, as she is in the studio for rehearsals most evenings until 9 p.m. Sunday is the one day they do not have practice, she said.

"Sometimes it is hard for my friends to understand," Montuoro said. "When I have to devote so much time to my dancing we kind of drift apart. But it is something I am use to, having been dancing for eight years."

Darlene Kelly, co-director of the Virginia Beach company, said she is extremely impressed with the dedication of the students.

"Especially this close to a performance a lot of demands are placed on the students' time," Kelly said. "Dance is important to them and that is why they are here. They must really budget their time. Some even bring their school books with them and work during rehearsal breaks."

For Breslin and Moore the time schedule is not a problem, they just want to learn as much as they can. The boys say how they ended up in the company is "as bit weird."

"We are breakdancers and auditioned for 'Street Games' which was choreographed by Darlene and Judith Hatcher (She is the other co-director of the company)," Moore said.

"I was actually a street mime," Breslin chimed in. "Yes, that was before we knew how to dance."

They received scholarships to study at Kelly and Hatcher's studio, the King's Grant Academy of Dance. Both are now planning to pursue careers as dancers.

"My friends think I'm crazy for going into dance," Breslin said. "They spend all their time playing basketball and stuff. But they don't joke me around about it. I used to play sports too, but I gave it up for dance."

One of the pieces the company will be performing in their upcoming show is "The Lotus Tree," choreographed by Thuesen. It was originally performed by the first Music in Motion company here in Virginia Beach in 1967.

The allegorical tale of a young handicapped girl, Marie, shunned by villagers is an adaptation of a story by Tony Vickers. Nancy Thuesen performs the part of Marie and the Lotus Tree is played by Hughes.

"You can see that the parts played by older members of the company really test their technical skills," Thuesen said, during a rehearsal of "The Lotus Tree." "There are simpler parts for the junior members of the company, but they still are gaining valuable skills."

Designing a piece to suit dancers of varying skills is a challenge choreographically, she said. This often means reworking parts of a dance or creating a whole new piece.

Hatcher, now a director and teacher, was a member of the original Lotus Tree cast.

"The beauty of Music in Motion is that it is ongoing," she said. "It has a strong past, having been around for 20 years, and a promising future."

Hatcher said that Music in Motion helped her to fulfill her dance dreams of being a teacher and choreographer.

"Barbara once said, if she could create one good dancer and one good teacher her work would be completed," she said. "The good dancer, of course is her daughter Nancy. I made a promise to myself that I would the good teacher."

A unique piece in the upcoming show is "Childsong." It is a folk ballet set to the music of Neil Diamond and incorporates the language of deaf-signing with the language of dance. Signing will be performed by members of the Tidewater Association for the Hearing-Impaired.

Maria Cartagena, from Puerto Rico, and Christiane Thomaschki, from Germany, are students in Level IV of the ESL program.

clothing," Kierman said. "We start with nouns. From hands, for example, you can move on to numbers and left and right."

The system progresses through colors and furniture in the classroom up to pictures of objects, like household items. The next step is teaching the students personal information, including name, address and telephone number.

In these lessons the students hear the teacher say the word, then say the word themselves. They see a picture of the object and write the word also.

Because the program has continuous enrollment, lessons are repeated regularly. This aids all class for students in the higher levels. The students spend an hour a day in the class. They are exposed to American literature, which is new to many of them. They are also given a chance to try their hand at creative writing in English.

The students are also very interested in how the American legal system works.

"They want to know about property deeds, how a person can register a will and what to do when they are served with a warrant," Dardent said. "They are very interested in how the democratic system works."

To provide the students with this information, the ESL program is starting to bring in members of the community to

Beachgoers won't go hungry this summer

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Beachgoers shouldn't go hungry next summer. Not in Virginia Beach.

First, City Council approved outdoor cafes along the boardwalk operated under a city franchise.

Recently it approved two more ordinances which will make eating easier on the strip.

One ordinance permits mobile vendors at four city stub streets. They also will operate under a franchise with the city.

Skip Hendricks, representing the Hotel and Motel Owners Association, said the association is not opposed to mobile vending, but doesn't want a lot of litter. He asked that the vending operations be evaluated the first year to determine whether the effect is positive.

Robert Wigg, a local vendor endorsed the ordinance, saying that vendors now have no place to go.

The other permits beachgoers to carry their own food and drinks to the beach so long as the containers are not glass and the drinks are not alcoholic.

But another ordinance approved last week is bad news for fishermen. It will be unlawful to fish from the sand beaches south of 42nd Street in Virginia Beach Borough between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. from Memorial Day weekend through Labor Day weekend. The prohibition has always been an unritten rule, but the ordinance leaves no doubt.

Another ordinance which makes it unlawful for anyone to sleep on the beaches between 8 p.m. and 8 a.m. was amended to give operators of cleaning equipment authority to request people to move out of the way of the cleaning equipment. It adds to the ban on sleeping impeding of the operation of the beach cleaning equipment.

With attention to aesthetics, council has also approved ordinance changes pertaining to the use of recently-acquired mobile refuse containers in the Virginia Beach Borough.

The containers are provided by the city. These and privately-owned bulk refuse containers (dumpsters) have to be located out of public view. The changes also limit to 200 pounds the amount of refuse placed in the mobile containers. Call for collection seven days a week from May 1 through Sept. 30, six days a week Monday through Saturday, April 1 through Oct. 31, and four days a week Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Nov. 1 through March 31.

The mobile containers also have to be removed out of view of the public no more than two hours after collection.

Action on a sixth ordinance was deferred. The ordinance eliminated the requirement to post signs indicating prohibition of bicycle riding. The deferral of two weeks, however, was to allow a review of moped use on sidewalks.

Councilman Robert G. Jones questioned the elimination of the signs. He said his son was arrested for riding a bike on the boardwalk, outside of the bike path. He said he was not in favor of removing conspicuous signs, remarking that his son had received no warning.

"To be frank, there really are no signs," said Michael Barrett, administrative assistant to the Resort Area Advisory Commission (RAAC) which recommended a review of the Beach ordinances. He said that signs involve an expense and would result in sign pollution. The law already prohibits bicycle or moped riding on any sidewalk within the city except sidewalks that have been designated as bicycle or moped routes. Riders also are restricted to the path marked on the boardwalk for bike riding.

Councilman Robert Pentress said that bike riders should know they're not supposed to ride on the other side of the line, but he added, "I'm sorry your son got arrested."

Pentress said regulations are needed for mopeds which "ride all over the place." He also said that part of the bike path on the boardwalk is too narrow. No bikes stay on that bike path.

He asked that the use of mopeds on the sidewalks be reviewed.

Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. abstained, saying that he or a member of his family may apply for a franchise.

Two generations of Music in Motion teachers, Barbara (front) and Nancy Thuesen, work with dancers.

Ashley McDaniel, a Page, serving during the 1986 Session of the Virginia General Assembly shares a bill with Delegate Glenn B. McClanahan, 84th District, her sponsor.

Beach girl working as Assembly Page

By Del. Glenn B. McClanahan
Ashley McDaniel, 13, an eighth grade student at Independence Junior School, was chosen from 49 applicants from the 84th House of Delegates District, to be a Page during the 1986 session of the Virginia General Assembly. She is the daughter of Lee and Shirley McDaniel.

During her stay in Richmond, McDaniel is residing at the John Marshall Hotel, with the other Pages. So that she will not get behind in her classes, she has a mandatory study hall from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. McDaniel said her main problem is that she cannot take any tests away from her school, and will have to take them on her return.

As a Page, she does errands for the extremely busy state legislators, freeing their time to concentrate on the many issues before them. For two weeks, she works on bill books, making sure all of the delegates have copies of the many pieces of legislation. For the next two weeks, McDaniel will be working on the House floor, where she responds to any request the legislators may make during the meeting.

Although she is having a lot of fun and meeting many interesting people, she says the job is hard work. However, this hard work has taught her a lot about the legislative process and she is confident that she will learn even more during the remainder of the sixty day session.

Delegate Glenn B. McClanahan, 84th District, said "Ashley is becoming keen around the General Assembly for her friendly smile and her willingness to work. She does so much for so many people without complaints." He added that "Ashley is definitely starting early to be a good citizen."

Master road plan amended to include Southeastern Expressway

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter
The city's Master Street and Highway Plan has been amended to include the Southeastern Expressway.

When the road was first proposed by Councilman Robert G. Jones in 1983, it met with a lukewarm response. The council then showed no interest in having it studied by the state Department of Highways and Transportation. Inclusion in the city plan, however, will promote state and regional studies.

The six-lane road would be a limited-access highway beginning at the Laskin Road interchange of the Virginia Beach/Norfolk Expressway. It would run south along part of Loudon/Bridge Road, veering to the southwest where it would cross into Chesapeake and hook up with Interstates 64 and 464.

Voting against the road's inclusion in the plan were Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan and Councilwoman Barbara Henley. Chesapeake City Council members have been enthusiastic about the project from the start.

Public hearing on station site scheduled

The Virginia Beach City Council will hold a public hearing on the selection of a refuse transfer station site on Monday, Feb. 3, at 2 p.m.

The public hearing will be held in the City Council Chambers at the Municipal Center and will involve the sites of: Cleveland Street; Greenwich Road; North Landstown Road; or London Bridge/Crusader Circle.

The transfer station will be a distribution center for the transfer or refuse to a disposal area. The building will be enclosed with vehicles traveling into and emptying into the facility.

For information, call the Department of Public Works/Solid Waste, 427-4201.

The project is intended to correct the unsafe intersection at Indian River and Elbow Roads while providing an adequate right-of-way width (110 feet) for a six-lane facility on Indian River road.

The homes of both James Moseley, at 4686 Indian River Road, and his mother, Sarah Moseley, at 4768 Indian River Road, located at the northern part of the improvement, will be taken by the realignment.

Moseley asked council to curve the road on the opposite side of the street to save the homes. He said that the properties have been in the family for more than 100 years. He has been living in his home for 17 years, and his mother in hers for 24 years.

He said he had not been notified about the public hearings on the road project.

Moseley also said that council did the people an injustice by permitting new development in the area without considering the impact on the road. He said a developer has begun building homes in an area which could have been used for a road.

The plan selected by council uses the existing alignment of Indian River Road south of Elbow Road and a new alignment north of Elbow Road which follows that provided by an alternative proposed by the neighborhood extending approximately 1600 feet north-northwest from existing Indian River at Elbow Road. There, the alignment follows the alignment provided by the neighborhood to the existing alignment at the Rosemont Forest subdivision.

The cost of this plan, recommended by the Planning Department, will be lowest of all the alternatives. It will be east of an area of Stumpy Lake where the soil would make it more expensive to build a road. The length of Independence Boulevard would be shortened by approximately 600 feet. The overall length is approximately 2,000 feet shorter than the neighborhood alternate.

The alternate also will bring the road within 10 feet of the home of Howard Everton, of 4253 Indian River road, and seven of his neighbors.

Councilman Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. made an motion to choose the neighborhood plan, but the motion was lost when a substitute motion, made by Councilman John A. Baum, passed.

Voting against the Baum motion were McCoy, Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan, and Councilwomen Barbara Henley and Meyera Oberdorf.

Moseley said that the city should have talked to him at an earlier date.

McCoy replied that every effort was made to contact the neighbors before two public meetings.

Moseley said that his mother had received a call from the Planning Department last Thursday to look at the plans. "My house is in the middle of the road," he said.

All of the proposals affect the Moseley family, he said, and asked Council to find another way. He said that the people should not be penalized for not knowing about the meetings. That isn't a crime, he said, but "to cause my mother to find another place, that would be a crime."

Everton said that the quality of his community was more valuable than that of a community still on paper. He referred to Glenwood, a subdivision being constructed in the area by R. G. Moore.

He said the neighborhood plan would have the least impact on the community. With that alternative only one of the Moseley homes would be taken.

Baum said he couldn't see how anyone could say the neighborhood proposal was good alignment. He recalled that a speaker had said there was not a "straight road in Virginia Beach, "but we can at last try."

Everton said that the problem had no easy solution. The neighborhood alignment is less straight, but would not bring the road 10 feet of the front door of eight residences.

He said that the hybrid version would have the same impact on the community as one of the other alignments.

McCoy said that "We can't spare everyone," and agreed with Everton.

His motion drew applause. When Baum made his motion, there was a smattering of applause.

As the losers gathered in the hallway later, the atmosphere was one of disillusionment, hopelessness and anger.

Cahill's City Council Corner

More revising planned

Joint cable center approved by council

A Joint Cable Center under the City and the School Board has been established to more efficiently produce programming for Channel 29, the local government access channel, and Channel 28, the educational access channel which will soon be activated by Cox Cable.

A center manager will be appointed to administer the studio which will be operated as a cooperative unit.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley asked, facetiously, whether that meant Council can decide whether the School Board meetings should be televised.

Councilman John Baum replied that council "shouldn't tell them what to do, but it would be in their own best interest."

The School Board was not favored having the meetings televised.

Condemnation action deferred

City Council has deferred condemnation proceedings in connection with the extension of Elbow Road to decide whether a part of a home site containing 120-year-old oaks can be saved.

Selma Tolle, speaking on behalf of her husband Elmer Tolle who owns the property, said that the site contains a 128-year-old home where 120-year-old trees would have to be removed to make way for the road.

She said that she did not think it fair that all the land for the road was coming from the Tolle property and asked that the road be moved over to save the trees.

Roger Melick, of 732 Harris Point Drive, read Tolle's statement when Tolle was overcome by tears. He said that every builder knew about the road extension but the Tolles.

He said Tolle also suffered when his farm land was rezoned from agricultural use to commercial in 1954 without his knowledge, forcing him to get rid of all his farm animals.

Councilman Louis R. Jones asked whether the road could be designed further up Princess Anne Road so that it would not interfere with the trees.

IRD bonds approved

City Council has approved Industrial Revenue Development (refunding) bonds for George S. Hazzis, for a manufacturing, warehouse, distribution, communications, training and office facility for $640,000 at 529 Viking Dr. The money will be used to refund the currently outstanding principal balance of formerly approved bonds.

River declared nothing but filth

Declaring that the Lynnhaven River was "nothing but filth," Darrell Hughes, chairman of the Lynnhaven River Water Quality Task Force, has named as two top priorities. First, to get the sedimentation traps in place and, second, to make a study of the septic tanks in the Lynnhaven area. As a by-product of the study, he said, the city could have a public awareness and education program.

Hughes also said that it was feasible to build a canal between Lynnhaven and Kudee Inlet. He said that the land which needs to be acquired has already been condemned by the Navy in implementing its Air Impact Compatible Use Zone (AICUZ) study. He said the project would pay for itself.

Hughes said the flushing action has to be increased; oysters are smothered in the silt. He said that septic tanks are not working properly, that the city should associate itself with the Chesapeake Bay program, and that a private consultant should be hired to discuss the feasibility of implementing all the recommendations in the report from a cost standpoint.

Game Commission contributes funds

The State Game Commission has agreed to contribute $150,000 a year for three years to the pumping project in the Back Bay Management Plan. The Back Bay report recommended the installation of pumps at three locations rather than one to pump salt water into the Bay. Councilwoman Barbara Henley recognized attorney Glen Croshaw, a member of the Game Commission, and City Planner Jack Whitney for their help in the project.

Insurance costs increase

Robert Esenberg, of the Risk Management Division, Finance Department, forewarned City Council that insurance costs will probably increase tremendously.

Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr., who is in the insurance business said that the rates are "the price we have to pay for having low interest rates."

Councilman Robert G. Jones also noted that his malpractice insurance rates have doubled. "It's a tough time in the insurance industry," said Esenberg.

Outside auditor sought

Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan and Councilman Louis R. Jones were named by Mayor Harold Heischöber as the council committee to select an outside auditor who will serve over the next three years.

Council kills plan for transit center

City Council killed plans for an Oceanfront Visitor's and Travel Center for the Beach Borough.

Councilman J. Henry McCoy, Jr., a member of the Tidewater Regional Transit Authority which proposed the center said Council's action was a "real shame," and means the loss of $11 million for Virginia Beach — $3 million outright from the Federal government and another $8 million in TFR bonds which would free the city's bonding authority for other needed projects.

Council rejected by a vote of 5-4 McCoy's motion to adopt one of three proposed options.

Crucial to the success of the project was the closing of 19th Street, the feature of the plan most criticized by business interests in the Beach Borough.

The whole thing, McCoy said, was predicated on the closing of 19th Street.

Voting against the motion were Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan, Councilmen Robert Fentress, H. Jack Jennings Jr., Robert G. Jones and Louis R. Jones, and Councilwoman Barbara Henley. Voting for the project were McCoy, Mayor Harold Heischöber, Councilwomen Nancy Creech and Meyera Oberndorf, and Councilman John A. Baum.

Student athletes awards presented

The two outstanding participants in Virginia Beach's Youth Recreation League have been chosen to receive this year's Maury Riganto Student Athlete Award.

This award is named in memory of the late chairman of the Parks and Recreation Commission and his many years of service to the city.

The 1985 female award winner is Robin Markland from the Arrowhead Recreation League. She is 17 years old and has participated in the Parks and Recreation community leagues since she was 10.

She excelled in softball as a pitcher. Now she is sharing the knowledge she acquired while participating in the leagues by helping the younger children in her area.

Markland attends Kempsville High School. She is the daughter of Robert and Ruth Markland.

Chris Armentrout from the Stumpy Lake Recreation League is this year's male Maury Riganto Award winner. He is 13 years old and participates in baseball, basketball and football.

He earned starting positions in all three sports and is cited for his hard work and positive attitude. Armentrout attends Brandon Junior High School and is the son of Charlie and Carol Armentrout.

Budget hearings, workshops set

City Council has scheduled a series of workshops and public hearings on the proposed 1986-87 operating budget which will be presented to Council on April 1.

The first Council workshop will be held April 17 from 4 to 7 p.m. Others are set for April 22 from 4 to 7 p.m. and May 8 from 4 to 7 p.m. All will be held in the conference room.

Public hearings will be held on April 29 at 7 p.m. at the Pavilion and on May 12 at 2 p.m. in the Council Chambers, when Council will consider the budget on first reading.

Council requests inclusion of river

City Council has asked the state to include the Lynnhaven River in the Virginia Chesapeake Bay Initiatives program adopted by the general Assembly to address water quality degradation in the Chesapeake Bay.

The request is made in a resolution proposed by Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. and adopted by City Council at the last meeting.

Inclusion of the river in the Chesapeake Bay Initiatives was recommended by the Lynnhaven Water Quality Task Force.

Awards given for contributions

The Virginia Beach Mayor's Committee on the Handicapped has recognized an individual, an organization and a business for their contributions to local handicapped citizens.

Jeff Hansen, a chief petty officer in the Navy, was commended for his work at the King Richard Residence group home, where he has been a volunteer since April of 1984.

Independence Center, Inc., a Norfolk organization, was cited for the services it provides to the handicapped—throughout Hampton Roads.

The business/corporation award went to the Virginia Beach Department of Parks and Recreation's Therapeutic Recreation Unit, which serves over 400 disabled individuals each year.

Commandments?" asked one Ethics Committee member, Robert Krebs.

"The deletion of candidates for election to City Council from the list of persons subject to the ordinance. Neither the Virginia Constitution nor the State statutes appear to give the city power to bring candidates for election under the purview of a local conflict of interest ordinance, according to Bimston. They are not public officials."

"The appointment by the city attorney and city clerk of the legal advisor to the standing Ethics Committee."

Council members were concerned for the most part with disclosure which would threaten the confidentiality of a client, sometimes required under other statutes.

Rae LaSene, president of the Council of Civic Organizations, said that the CCO endorsed the ordinance submitted by the Ethics Committee, but that it had no time for proper review of the attorney's changes. He said that action on the ordinance last week would be "undue haste in a matter of considerable importance."

Councilman John A. Baum agreed that council as well as the public has had too little time to study the changes, that Council had only a brief discussion in executive session, and that he had the impression that council would have no workshop.

Walt Vargo, president of the Citizens Action Coalition, said the coalition supports a stronger conflict of interest law, and the public indicated the same support when 15,000 persons signed petitions for an ordinance last November. He said he favored an ordinance like the one in Fairfax.

Mayor Heischöber said that he understood that the Fairfax law is being revised.

Tom Aiken, a committee member, said that the Council should act soon so the law would be in effect during the coming council campaign. Council elections are in May.

Aiken said that no law would be perfect, but that the ordinance could be improved "as you go along."

Irv Douglas, past president of the CCO, and a member of the Committee, objects to having the legal advisor appointed by the city attorney and city clerk, saying "that would smack of cronyism." He said that the standing ethics committee should appoint the attorney with advice from the city attorney.

Vice Mayor Reba McClanahan also said the legal advisor should not be appointed by the city attorney or city clerk, but by someone like the chief circuit court judge.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that some words need more definition like "relative." She said that since her family has lived here so long, she has "cousins and aunts and uncles I don't even know." She also sought better definitions for "close friends" and "close neighbors."

Henley also questioned a provision which makes it legal for a person with a conflict to vote "no" on an application, but not a conflict to vote "yes."

McCoy pointed out that where a volatile issue is involved, an abstention often is a way out.

R. Jones said of the ordinance provisions of disclosing a confidence "this is a crime. This is serious business. You're talking about people who may be prosecuted. I'm concerned about the seriousness of the ordinance." He said that in saying let the court decide whether it is constitutional, "You're asking us to violate the only thing we swore to when we took office—the basic oath to uphold the Constitution."

Jones' ordinance calls for the persons subject to the ordinance, to declare their relationship prior to consideration of a matter and Council would decide whether they will be permitted to participate.

Robert Galewski, another member of the Ethics Committee, asked why people should know about Council than about the people running for Council. He said that he liked a number of the attorney's changes, but that other things needed clarification.

Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr. said that he was pleased that the issue had been moved from a back burner to a front burner as he requested the previous week in executive session. He also said that no rules can be too strict, that he would have no problem following the requirements of the ordinance, and that he would have more problems as a citizen filing a complaint for fear the charge is labeled false. The citizens can then be subject to criminal charges.

Jennings also sees no problem with revealing his IRS return and said that he would not be bothered if he set limit for business dealings over which a conflict can be considered is lowered to nothing.

He said the proposed standing ethics committee should have no ties to City Council and that the committee should appoint its own attorney.

The voting records of both Jennings and Councilwoman Nancy Creech have been under scrutiny for possible conflicts. Creech was absent at last week's meeting.

Jaycees have a new home

Continued from Page 1 experience and learn how to run an organization," Roth said. "When older people are in an organization they naturally tend to be in charge. When I first joined the organization I had some problems with this concept but now I understand the value of it."

The addition of women to the Jaycees has resulted in some positive improvements, he said. It has been about one-and-one-half years since a United States Supreme Court ruling opened membership in the Jaycees to women. Already there are four women serving on the board of the Virginia Beach Jaycees.

"At first there were some mixed feelings about having women in the Jaycees," Roth said. "Some of the older members viewed Jaycee activities as the 'mens' night out.' The women have been very beneficial. They come up with ideas and are doing things the men would never think of doing. I would say our new membership is split about 50-50 men and women."

Roth said the age of the average member in the Jaycees has changed somewhat since he first joined the organization. While it used to be mostly people in their late 20s and early 30s who joined, many of the new members are people 22 or 23 coming right out of college, he said.

"I would characterize Jaycee members as two basic types," Roth said. "There are paper members, who join because being a Jaycee looks good on a resume."

Mark Roth, president of Virginia Beach Jaycees, receives proclamation for Jaycee Week from Mayor Harold Heischöber.

More importantly are the members who join because they want to be active in the community."

Along with social and fund-raising activities, the Jaycees are involved in numerous community service projects in Virginia Beach. Among these are the Community Talent Show for the handicapped and sending local handicapped children to Camp Jaycee in Roanoke, which is run by the state Jaycee organization. They also sponsor the Outstanding Young Citizen and First Citizen of the Year awards.

The Virginia Beach Jaycees meet on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month.
